Rebels Hurl 175,000 Men Upon Toledo And Madrid

Concerted Drive Against Capital Under Way on 3 Fronts.

Loyalists Put Off Blowing Up Fort

Speed Reinforcements, Give Foe 'Last Chance' to Surrender.

Copyright, 1936, by the Associated Press.

Madrid Sept. 17.—Gen. Francisco Franco, supreme war lord of the Spanish insurgents, tonight led his Fascist legions, 175,000 strong, against the government-held cities of Toledo and Madrid.

A terrific battle, which government sources termed "the fiercest since the outbreak of the revolution," was fought near Toledo, 40 miles south of Madrid.

The rebels were driving toward 1,700 of their comrades threatened with being blown up in their besieged fortress, the Alcazar at Toledo.

Government leaders who earlier had announced a "terrible decision" to blow up the fortress and all the men, women and children within, postponed action today to give the occupants one last chance to surrender their women and children.

Men Are Doomed.

The men, they said, were doomed.

The concerted rebel offensive against Madrid was under way on three fronts, with the opposing armies numerically about even.

The Madrid leaders rushed thousands of reinforcements in an effort to stem the slow but steady advance of the rebels.

The spearhead of Franco's attack was that pointed at Toledo, while simultaneous assaults were launched at San Martin de Valdeiglesias, 36 miles west of Madrid, and at Siguenza, 70 miles northeast of Madrid.

Thus, the rebels made Madrid the center of a rough drawn equilateral triangle, with the insurgent armies attacking simultaneously from each of the three vertices.

Seek Reinforcements.

Government leaders tonight cast about for more and more reinforcements, remembering Franco's boast that he could hurl 1,000,000 men against Madrid in two weeks if he had a mind to.

Artillery batteries, in position for weeks, blazed away at the advancing rebels.

Government planes were reported to have brought down six enemy ships—one said to be foreign-made and piloted by a foreigner.

Admitting the insurgent advantage of a superior air force, the government tonight campaigned for foreign "dare devil" pilots to man its ships.

"A huge fleet of new bombing and fighting planes," the government said, awaited the touch of experienced aviators on their controls.

The air armada, the government said, soon would be delivered at Madrid from hastily devised airplane plants at Barcelona.

One Last Ultimatum.

Copyright, 1936, by the Associated Press.

Toledo, Spain, Sept. 17.—The 1,700 men, women and children within the deseiged fortress Alcazar tonight were given one last ultimatum—to surrender or be blown to pieces.

The mayor of Toledo said government leaders at the last minute had thus postponed their "terrible decision" to set off tons of dynamite in two 100-foot mines tunneled beneath the crumbling walls of the historic structure.

If surrender is not forthcoming, the mayor said, the fortress would be blown up "soon."

The mayor ordered the greater part of the city's population of about 30,000 to prepare to evacuate their homes early in the morning and seek refuge in the surrounding country side or in safe sections of the city.

Throughout the day laborers and soldiers tamped down additional charges of explosives. Each charge contained more than a ton of dynamite.

Lieut. Col. Luis Barcelo, military government commander in Toledo, said he would give the occupants the last chance to give themselves up—the women and children prom-

300 Welfare Leaders Hear Roosevelt's Plea at White House; Newton Baker and Gerard Swope Stress Needs of Campaign.

President Roosevelt yesterday appealed to the Nation to respond to the 1936 Mobilization for Human Needs in the "fine tradition of the American people who have never failed to heed a call of distress."

After the President's address from the south portico of the White House to 300 welfare leaders assembled on the lawn, he suggested to Gerard Swope, chairman of the campaign and president of the General Electric Co., that the Community Chests of the country set their goals 10 per cent higher this year.

Swope, in a press conference, told reporters that the giant corporations of the Nation will likely assume a greater share of the private relief load this autumn, since returning prosperity will enable them to contribute larger amounts than in former years.

He stressed sharply that the return of prosperity does not lessen the relief burden.

"The need is greater than before," he said. "Agencies have been doing maximum work with minimum funds. One of the greatest problems—that of building the character and maintaining the morale of those who have suffered severely in the depression—has scarcely been touched."

Blum Answers Hitler, Defends Democracies

Premier Makes His Speech Even as New Clashes Imperil Peace.

By the Associated Press.

Paris, Sept. 17.—Premier Leon Blum tonight delivered a vigorous defense of democratic forms of government as France's "answer" to the anti-democratic speeches of Adolf Hitler at the Nazi convention this week.

France is divided by conflicting doctrines of political parties, he said, but in time of danger would be united "to defend her soil."

Even as the premier spoke another threat to France's political peace made its appearance—new activity by the militant "French Social Party," successor to the Croix de Feu disbanded by government decree.

Giving rise to the fear of possible fighting between Rightists and Leftists, Col. Francois de la Rocque's followers in the "French Social Party" placarded the city with gigantic posters charging "the Popular Front has deceived."

Leftists Roam Streets.

Squads of Leftists, some of them shouting "La Rocque to the scaffold!" roamed the streets trying to rip down the posters.

Police, fearing violence, were stationed wherever one of the signs appeared. They found La Rocque guards also on the watch, and had instructions to call for reinforcements if needed.

Meanwhile, informed sources declared that France proposes to draw up a plan for the reduction of world armaments and submit it to the League of Nations after an ex-

Mrs. Roosevelt Is Ill Of Grippe; Ordered To Bed by Doctor

By the United Press.

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, suffering from an attack of grippe, was ordered to bed yesterday by Dr. Ross McIntire, White House physician, after her temperature soared over 100 degrees.

All the First Lady's engagements were cancelled.

Mrs. Roosevelt contracted a slight cold several days ago. The ailment grew progressively worse, but the First Lady kept all of her engagements until today when Dr. McIntire intervened and ordered her to bed for several days.

It was the first illness from which Mrs. Roosevelt, one of the most active of all Presidential wives who have ruled the White House, has suffered since her husband was inaugurated on March 4, 1933.

D. C. Officials Likely to Back Health Center

City Heads 'Sympathize' With Dr. Ruhland's Budget Request.

By James D. Secrest.

A substantial share of the $609,522 increase asked by the Health Department in its 1938 estimates, including one public health center, is expected to be recommended by the District Commissioners in its supplemental proposals to the Budget Bureau as the result of an executive hearing yesterday.

While the Commissioners declined to reveal their action, because of the secrecy imposed upon them by the Budget Bureau, they expressed themselves as "sympathetic" with the requests of Health Officer George C. Ruhland, despite the opposition of the District Medical Society to the proposed health centers.

Dr. Ruhland asked for $500,000 to construct two centers. He explained that his ultimate purpose was to put five such large clinics into operation with the principal aim of combatting tuberculosis and venereal diseases.

As the Commissioners previously had decided to submit the 1937 budget in two sections, with the original draft pared to bare operating costs, it is obvious that the

U. S. Prepares To Liquidate Consumer Aid

Former NRA Division, Now at Labor, Will Be Denied Funds.

Budget Vetoes Journal; 'Cabinet' Already Out; Ayres Quits Job.

By Robert C. Albright.

"An independent Administration gesture which started out aggressively less than a year ago "to get the buying public more for its money" by publicizing data on cost factors, has been virtually sidetracked, it was learned yesterday.

Under continuous reorganization, the old NRA consumer's division, which became a consumers' project under the Labor Department last April, probably is headed for oblivion when the present appropriation expires, it was said in a reliable quarter.

Tied into this development is the Budget Bureau's refusal to approve plans of the consumers' project for resuming publication of its magazine, The Consumer, it was learned. The Budget Bureau has turned the request back to the project, with an expression of doubt as to authority for the venture. The magazine formed virtually the only medium for the unit publicizing its researches.

Committee Set Up.

It became known yesterday Clarence E. Ayres, director of the project, has resigned and returned to the University of Texas, where he is head of the economics department. His successor has not been named. Officials said Ayres accepted the post with the understanding he might return to the university, if he so desired. Thomas W. Holland, his chief assistant, is now serving in the role of acting director.

Dissolution of the "Consumers' Cabinet" of seven nationally prominent economists set up last October, also came to light for the first time, although this advisory group actually ceased to function several months ago. At that time an interdepartmental committee, headed by Secretary of Labor Perkins, was set up to take its place. The committee meets only at call of the secretary, and is irregularly attended, it was learned.

The so-called "Consumers' Cabinet" was named by Walton H. Hamilton, former adviser to the President on consumers' problems, who headed the old consumers' division. The group functioned less than six months.

Hamilton, who is now research director of the Social Security Board, announced at the time that the economists would "assist the Administration effort to get the buying public more for its money."

The now defunct "cabinet," which served voluntarily and without pay, comprised Mrs. Emily Newell Blair, of Missouri; Michael H. Davis, of Chicago; Leon Henderson, of this city; Calvin B. Hoover, of North Carolina; Miss Helen Wright, of Chicago; Robert S. Lynd, of New York, and Stacy May, of New York.

Six on Committee.

The interdepartmental committee, superimposed over the consumers' project when the unit was reorganized, and the "Consumer's Cabinet" failed of reappointment, includes, besides Secretary Perkins, Miss Josephine Roche, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury; Thomas Blaisdell, jr., Social Security Board's assistant director of research; Isador Lubin, commissioner of labor statistics; John G. Winant, chairman of the Social Security Board, and Holland, acting director of the consumers' project.

Price studies of a number of commodities were conducted by economists under the old consumers division, and these were reported directly to the President. Excerpts from only a few of these ever were made public. Under the reorganized set-up, these reports will not go to the President. They will go to the interdepartmental committee. But it was learned yesterday the committee has received none since it was organized.

The consumers' project still has a small staff engaged in research studies on standards for consumers' goods, and trends of prices in some

Langley Field's Planes Removed

60-Mile Wind Reported Battering Coast of North Carolina.

By the Associated Press.

Newport News, Va., Sept. 17.—Remembering with shudders the havoc wrought all over the peninsula by the gale and tides of August 23, 1933, residents today and tonight made elaborate preparations to withstand the blow and high tides expected as a backlash of the tropical hurricane raging at sea.

In Newport News, the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad was moving all merchandise out of its steamship piers. Storekeepers reinforced plate-glass windows. Similar preparations were made all over the city.

City Manager Joseph C. Biggins ordered all policemen and firemen to remain on duty, and street, sewer and garbage departments to stand by.

National Guard Mobilized.

The National Guard service battery here, and Battery D at Hampton were mobilized and the Huntington Rifles stood ready for orders. The Naval Reserves mobilized voluntarily. The Rev. J. K. M. Lee, chairman of the Red Cross disaster relief committee, summoned his committee.

Even heavier preparations were made in Hampton and vicinity. Residents of Buckroe Beach were being evacuated all day. Langley Field sent all its aircraft to other posts, and the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, which suffered a $250,000 loss in 1933, moved its delicate instruments to safety.

Fort Monroe officers placed all troops on duty; moved all mobile guns and military equipment to high ground and records to high buildings, and evacuated noncommissioned officers from beach quarters.

They filled the fort's 300,000-gallon water supply tank to guard against the possibility of the water main, crossing a bridge to the post, breaking. Sandbags were ready to weight down the bridge, if necessary. Boats attached to the post were moved to safety.

In Hampton and Phoebus policemen and firemen were on extra duty. Sandbags were ready at the electric power plant supplying the lower peninsula, and it is believed that an even higher tide than that of 1933, which hamstrung the generating plant for hours, can be held back now.

Fishermen at Fox Hill, Messick and Poquoson, all hard-hit in 1933, brought their boats and tackle in. Similar preparations were made at Yorktown and vicinity, and in Gloucester and Mathews Counties.

Maryland on Guard.

Baltimore, Sept. 17 (AP).—State departments moved swiftly today to guard lives and property from the hurricane sweeping toward the coast.

The State roads commission, mindful of the 1933 storm which wrecked many Eastern Shore roads, called the Weather Bureau for frequent reports. However, Nathan L. Smith, chief engineer of the commission, said there was little his department could do in advance. Workmen can be mobilized for quick repair work and machinery made ready, but no protection can be given roads. Only in case of high water, he said, can road employes protect highways with dykes. A watch can be kept on bridges to make sure that they are not being undermined.

The State police radio station broadcast bulletins on the advance of the storm. Maj. Enoch B. Garey, commander, said his men would be on the alert to protect traffic in case high water accompanied heavy winds.

Landon Thanks J. A. Reed, Ely For Maine Aid

Issues Beyond Partisan Lines, He Says; G.O.P. Youth Gathering.

By the Associated Press.

Topeka, Kans., Sept. 17.—Saying the Presidential campaign "goes far beyond partisan lines," Gov. Alf M. Landon personally expressed appreciation today for support given the Maine Republican ticket by anti-New Deal Democrats—James A. Reed and Joseph B. Ely.

He wrote Reed, former Senator from Missouri, that "millions of American citizens are grateful for the help you gave in the Maine campaign preceding this week's elections."

Simultaneously, a letter to Ely, former Governor of Massachusetts, said "the expressions of many Maine people whom I met during my visit in that State last week strengthened my own realization of your great help in the campaign there."

"Understood Importance."

The Republican Presidential nominee dispatched the letters as young Republican leaders throughout the Nation converged on Topeka to get acquainted personally with the standard bearer and hear him discuss 1936 campaign issues.

Landon's letter to Reed said that "if we are to enjoy once more just and efficient representative government, the American people as a whole must place the country's welfare above partisan interests."

"The people of Maine," the Kansan added, "apparently understanding the importance of the referendum, have done so."

The city auditorium, seating nearly 3,500 persons, was reserved for the gathering which Landon will address at 2 p. m. (3 p. m., E. S. T.) tomorrow. Fred A. Sea-

Speaking Dates For Roosevelt, Knox Conflict

Both to Talk in Pittsburgh Oct. 1; Democrats Seek to Use Forbes Field.

By the Associated Press.

Pittsburgh, Sept. 17.—Pittsburgh faced the unusual situation today of having to choose October 1 between listening to President Roosevelt and Col. Frank Knox in pre-election speeches.

President Roosevelt was booked unexpectedly last night to speak here on that date.

Two weeks ago the Republican National Committee announced Col. Knox, running mate of Gov. Alf Landon, Republican Presidential nominee, would speak at Duquesne Gardens.

For a time today there was prevalent belief both parties expected to use the same auditorium.

James H. Duff, Republican county chairman, settled the question which would use the gardens by showing a contract, and shortly afterwards James P. Kirk, Democratic county chairman, said he was negotiating for use of Forbes Field, home of the Pittsburgh National League baseball club.

If the latter is obtained, the President would have a substantial edge in seating capacity over his republican foeman. Forbes Field seats more than 40,000, Duquesne Gardens 8,000.

Earlier the same day the Repub-

Storm Cuts Short Island Honeymoon Of Young Couple

Fernandina, Fla., Sept. 17 (AP).—Lieut. and Mrs. J. F. Prime cut short their two-week "Garden of Eden" honeymoon on little Talbot Island today when rough seas kicked up by a passing hurricane caused them concern.

With no way to communicate with the outside world, they did not know the disturbance already had passed and was approaching the North Carolina coast. They feared a major storm might be headed for the isolated little island—now uninhabited again—off the north Florida coast.

The young couple plan spending a few days on the Florida mainland before returning to their home at Rochester, N. Y.

"The trip was perfect," the bride of two weeks said, in commenting on her one-week adventure, "but it began to blow considerably and we thought it best to leave the island."

What Is a Gale?

By the Associated Press.

The Weather Bureau defines:

Hurricane—Winds of 75 miles an hour or over.

No Damage Expected, Here; Ship Carrying 36 Sends Out S O S.

A West Indian hurricane, carrying the threat of death and destruction, was roaring in from the Atlantic toward Cape Hatteras, N. C., early today—the tenth anniversary of the great hurricane that devastated Miami and its suburbs in 1926.

The Weather Bureau expected the center of the hurricane to hit Cape Hatteras and then head for the Virginia Capes, striking there about noon.

Norfolk and its environs were expected to feel nearly the full force of the storm, and were preparing accordingly. Lower Chesapeake Bay and Maryland's Eastern Shore also were in the storm area.

Winds to Increase.

At 10 o'clock last night, the Weather Bureau had this to say about Washington:

"In Washington and vicinity the winds will increase tonight and become strong from the northeast Friday, accompanied by rain. However, at present, no damaging winds are indicated in or near Washington."

The Norfolk & Washington Steamboat Co. canceled its sailings late yesterday, holding the Northland here and the District of Columbia at Norfolk. They will leave this morning at 6:30 o'clock if weather reports are favorable.

The dreaded hurricane warnings were up from Manteo, N. C., to the Virginia Capes, and storm warnings from Atlantic City, N. J., to Nantucket, Mass.

The first cry of distress came from the S. S. El Almirante, a freighter, which reported engine trouble 60 miles off Cape Hatteras. The ship has a crew of 36.

"Cannot make repairs," said a message from the El Almirante received by the Coast Guard. "Need assistance. Will get in touch with El Lago or El Occidente. (Two of the company's other ships believed to be in the vicinity.) Move to. Wind 80 miles. Drifting."

The Coast Guard cutter Modoc was sent to the ship's assistance.

The Red Cross, the Coast Guard and the National Guard worked hand in hand to evacuate communities in the path of the hurricane, and there were reports of hundreds of persons being removed to high ground. As in the past, however, many refused to leave.

Waves Buffet Resort.

The Red Cross warned residents of Tangier and Smith Islands in Chesapeake Bay to expect the hurricane to drive a wall of water 6 to 9 feet high over their shores. These islands were isolated for several weeks last winter by a heavy "freeze."

Telephone communications to Cape Hatteras went down shortly after 9:30 p. m. The 11 lines to Virginia Beach and Cape Henry also went dead, and the Coast Guard had to depend altogether on radio communication.

At 11 p. m. the beacon in the lighthouse at Cape Henry, one of the oldest in the country, went out. Electricity at Virginia Beach also was cut off.

A foretaste of the storm was felt along the coast from Beaufort, N. C., to Norfolk, Va., as great waves rolled up the beach and trees leaned over from the wind.

High tides, driven by the wind, destroyed part of the boardwalk at Atlantic Beach, near Beaufort. A. E. Shackell, managing director of the resort, said the waves were higher than the hotel from which he was telephoning.

Ocean City, Md., probably the most exposed resort along that part of the Atlantic Coast, made ready to combat high winds and waves resulting from the hurricane.

So did Virginia Beach, which will be near the center of the storm. The hotels of this resort were boarded up as guests fled inland. Permanent residents ordered extra

Weather Bureau's Wires Hum With Warnings of Hurricane As Operators Tap Messages of Life, Death in Battle Tension

In an atmosphere charged with the drama of battle, the Weather Bureau last night matched its wits with the greatest hurricane to strike the Atlantic seaboard since August, 1933.

Bent over their instruments, telegraph operators sent warnings up and down the coast. Warnings which promptly were relayed to big cities and the little towns, to fishermen and truck farmers, to housewives and their children.

For, shortly before midnight, after a day of tireless effort, a general wire was flashed to every available point as far north as Eastport, Me., that the hurricane was but 100 miles southeast of Cape Hatteras, and that by noon today it would be roaring and thundering off the Virginia Capes.

At direction of a score of officials, who toiled tirelessly in the gusty night, storm lights and warning flags apepared farther and farther north.

Their messages were picked up and spread up and down the countryside. Coast Guardsmen in the danger areas went here and there and routed families from their houses, for the Weather Bureau here, in touch with ships at sea, had flashed the word that the "big blow" was coming.

When the winds whined and roared and the seas rose, the people were prepared.

Source of the storm warnings is the news received from the vessels in the path of the disturbance. In normal times, accredited ships radio the Weather Bureau here twice daily.

But when tropical hurricanes whirl, they report four times. The reports are radioed to the nearest available land stations, and then sent in international code direct to the bureau.

First word of the present hurricane was received September 10 from a little tramp ship far down in the South Atlantic, in what is known as the "hurricane belt," which includes the Gulf of Mexico and the Caribbean.

From that time the Weather Bureau had its eye on the hurricane.

When the storm became intense and menacing, reports multiplied. Ships caught in its path flashed word of impending disaster, then fled before the fury of the gale. It was then the Weather Bureau began directing that warning flags be flown at full staff. Seaplanes were instructed to take off and drop their pennants and streamers attached to floats.

On each banner was printed the words: "Hurricane Warning!"

The storm flags by day and the lanterns by night are invaluable, Thomas R. Brooks, assistant to E. B. Calvert, chief of the forecast division, said last night.

The Weather Bureau, through its special radio, was in touch with every ship in the Atlantic last night. Latest weather reports were rushed to the radio room, where they were punched on tape in code.

Immediately the tape was transferred to the sending device on the radio and broadcast over short wave to ships thousands of miles at sea. Any vessel with a radio could pick up the reports.

"We are the pulse," observed Brooks; "we tell them what is coming."

The ships cannot reply. They get their messages and chart their courses accordingly. Copies of the reports broadcast are carefully filed. More than once they have proved important evidence in admiralty cases.

In directing the fight against the hurricane last night, officials were aided by the charts of previous hurricanes, some of which occurred two decades ago.

The hurricane last night reached what is classed as the Washington area when it raged off Cape Hatteras. For any area north of Hatteras is regarded as directly in Washington territory.

In charge of hurricane warning work is Forecaster C. L. Mitchell. His chief aids are Brooks and Calvert. Veterans of many storms, these scientists know, as nearly as possible, the nature and temperament of hurricanes.

G. O. P. Drafts Drive to Carry 3 Dixie States

Martin Asserts Republicans Plan Intensive Effort to Win Seaboard.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Sept. 17.—Opening a conference of Republican leaders from Maine to Florida, Representative Joseph W. Martin, Eastern division campaign manager, said today the Republican Party would soon inaugurate an intensive campaign not only in the border State of Maryland, but in Virginia, North Carolina and Florida.

About 50 national committeemen, State chairmen and other leaders participated in the conference with Martin, National Chairman John D. M. Hamilton and Harrison B. Spangler, national committeeman from Iowa and Hamilton's assistant in Chicago.

In a series of private sessions, these leaders discussed each State in detail.

Hamilton Answers Foes.

Representative Martin said the party would make the most extensive drive in its history down the Atlantic seaboard.

"We hope to carry not only Maryland," Martin said, "but also Virginia, North Carolina and Florida. We are confident of victory in one of these States."

When asked to which State he referred, Martin said "our best bet is in Florida."

At the same time Chairman Hamilton replied to Democratic charges of fraud in the Maine election with an assertion that a recount of the votes would show "a substantial increase" in the Republican pluralities.

While he did not directly charge violation of the election laws as the Democrats did, Hamilton told newspapermen he placed considerable credence in reports from Republican workers that returns from Lewiston, which gave Gov. Louis J. Brann a large plurality in the Senatorial race, had been held back in an attempt to overcome Senator Wallace H. White's lead in the State.

"I have no objection to a recount in Maine," he said, "I think it would show a substantial increase in the Republican pluralities."

Striking directly at Senator Joseph F. Guffey, of Pennsylvania, who announced the Democrats would demand a recount, Hamilton said:

"If all I hear is true, Senator Guffey ought to be an expert on election frauds."

He said he would like to ask Guffey if there was any truth in stories that a large transient vote had been moved into Pennsylvania recently, or if it were true that some 4,000 former Boulder Dam workers are being kept on the registration rolls of that area after being away for months.

Hamilton said he is pleased with the primary vote in Michigan, stated that the Maine election has "spread all over" and will be of great help to the Republican cause during the next six weeks.

The States represented at today's conference were Connecticut, Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Rhode Island, Massachusetts, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Virginia, West Virginia, Florida, North Carolina and Maryland.

Asked about a story out of Washington that Attorney General Homer S. Cummings had threatened to take action against persons displaying placards purporting to show the effect of taxes on consumer prices, Hamilton said:

"Any man who would send another man to jail for pressing a pair of pants for 35 cents or any Administration that would do it could be expected to do anything in a political crisis. We can only wait and see." He left tonight for Chicago.

ton, Kansas Young Republican chairman, said 100 representatives from at least 47 States and the District of Columbia will be included in the audience, in addition to a delegation from each of the 105 Kansas counties.

"I believe every State with the possible exception of Vermont will have representatives here," Seaton told reporters, emphasiing that the meeting would be open "to all young voters, regardless of past political affiliations."

The conference assembled in a brief lull between two major campaign trips—last week-end's dash to Maine and next week's tour through Iowa, Minnesota, Wisconsin and Illinois. The speeches he will make on this six-day swing through farm territory and tomorrow's talk occupied the nominee today.

"What do you think of Senator Holt?" the Governor was asked by newsmen at his customary press conference.

"I liked him very much," he replied.

Senator Rush D. Holt, West Virginia Democrat, called yesterday to discuss the Works Progress Administration in which he has charged "scandalous political activities." The Senator told reporters he had a file of information on WPA which he would make available to Landon if he wanted it.

"Have you asked for Holt's file?" the nominee was asked.

"There is probably some interesting information there," Landon replied.

The Kansan spent much of his time today at the executive mansion where he entertained a luncheon party including Gov. Harold G. Hoffman, of New Jersey; Mr and Mrs. Henry Field, of Shenandoah, Iowa, and the Rev. James Pearson, of Shenandoah.

"There is a big pick-up for Landon in New Jersey," Gov. Hoffman told reporters after the luncheon conference. "He will carry New Jersey in November The visit to Maine dramatized the situation."

Field, Republican Senatorial candidate in 1932, predicted to reporters that "Landon will carry Iowa by 100,000 in November."

Suggestion Republicans Can Make Inroads in Solid South Will Not Down.

By Franklyn Waltman

FREQUENTLY during this year's Presidential campaign the suggestion has been projected that Gov. Alf M. Landon, the Republican nominee, has a chance to crack the so-called Solid South and capture the electoral vote of one or more of those States.

WALTMAN.

Despite the success which Herbert Hoover had in 1928 in carrying four of these traditionally Democratic Southern States, political observers have paid little attention to such suggestions. They have paid no more attention to them than they did in 1928 to suggestions that Al Smith had a chance to carry such a Republican stronghold as Pennsylvania.

In recent days there has been less reason to believe that the Republicans had any chance whatever in the Southland. In Arkansas, Mississippi, South Carolina and Georgia incumbent Senators, loudly professing their belief in the New Deal and President Roosevelt, have won overwhelming victories in Democratic fights. Thus it is clear that if Southern Democrats will not vote for an anti-New Deal Democrat, they will not vote for a Republican.

Yet the suggestion that Mr. Landon has a chance in some of the Southern States will not be downed. It was revived yesterday by Republican Chairman John Hamilton and Republican Eastern Campaign Manager Joseph W. Martin, as they met in New York party leaders from the Atlantic Seaboard States. They named Virginia, North Carolina and Florida as the three Southern States in which they believed the Republican standard bearer this year has a chance.

If Mr. Landon has a chance in any State of the Solid South it would be in one of these three States. Mr. Hoover carried the three in 1928. A large number of white Republicans resides in each of these States. The division between the two parties has been much closer in them than elsewhere. But at the same time it is clear that in the absence of conditions as extraordinary as those which existed in 1928, these States will remain in the Democratic column.

It is true that if political principles were a controlling factor there is greater reason for them to break away from the Democratic Party than at any time in recent years—far greater than in 1928. Theoretically, the South has been wedded to the principle of State rights for more than a century. It fought a war over that issue.

And it is also true that the Roosevelt Administration, despite its Democratic label, has had less regard for State rights than any Federal regime in many decades. Indeed, if Mr. Roosevelt had his way he would lodge in the Washington government many of the major rights and powers which the Supreme Court always has held belonged to the sovereign States.

And, it is true, further, that many Southern Democrats have been disturbed by the actions of the Roosevelt Administration and that the New Deal is thoroughly distasteful to them. They feel, if they do not publicly say so, that President Roosevelt has betrayed them and the Democratic Party—that he broke the pledges on which he won his election and that he has deserted the Democratic Party.

Here and there throughout the Southland have been Democrats of sincerity and courage who have announced they will not vote for President Roosevelt this year for these reasons. But in States where the margin of voting between Democrats and Republicans normally is three and four to one, it would take a far greater Democratic revolt than has become apparent to put such States in the Landon column.

The truth of the Southern political situation is that the people of that section of the country have not adhered so firmly to the Democratic Party because of political principles—but they have done so because of their racial prejudices. Ever since the Civil War the Democrats have appealed to the South chiefly on one issue—that of the Negro.

In 1928, the Republicans injected another prejudice into the Southern campaign. They sought to inflame the Southern Democrats' religious prejudices and to get it to overcome his racial prejudices. They were successful in four States. This is not to say that many Southern Democrats voted Republican on that issue alone. They did not. Many believed Al Smith's views on prohibition were thoroughly immoral and wrong. But the evidence is abundant that had prohibition been the only issue in 1928, the South would have remained solid. Four years later it remained solid when another Democratic standard bearer espoused prohibition repeal.

So we arrive at the proposition that if Republican hopes of capturing one or more Southern States are not fanciful, unrealistic and amateurish, then they are based on a successful revival of an issue of racial prejudice—and that is not a pleasant prospect to contemplate. But there is evidence at hand indicating that this is so.

At this point it might be emphasized that there is no intention here of accusing Gov. Landon or the Republican high command of seeking to inspire such a campaign or that they would lend encouragement to it. Mr. Hoover had no hand in injecting religious prejudice into the 1928 campaign, but he profited from it—needlessly, as things turned out—and he never repudiated the work done in the Southland by Republican agents.

There are at work in Virginia and Florida, if not in other Southern States, persons seeking to promote the Republican cause by turning against the Democrats their old issue of racial prejudice. Copies of the Georgia Woman's World, containing photographs of the Presidential family and other New Deal figures in the company of Negroes, now are being spread throughout those States. This campaign literature—no, not literature, rubbish—first appeared at the Talmadge grass roots convention at Macon last January and set the tone for that gathering. Similar pamphlets and brochures also are being circulated, in some instances with the knowledge of Republican leaders, and in others by Democrats who know no other form of political campaigning.

The latest of these efforts to foment racial prejudice has just come to hand. It is a small brochure appealing to Democrats to join an organization known as "CESPA," which is described "of Southern Democrats, by Southern Democrats, for Southern Democrats." The organization is said to be led by Frank Kay Anderson, described as former member of the Democratic executive committee, of Seminole, Fla.

Beginning with a recital of Senator Ellison D. ("Cotton Ed") Smith's refusal to sit in the Democratic National Convention while Negroes were addressing that body, this brochure contends that "maintaining white supremacy is necessary if the integrity of the South is to be preserved." For a dime each member gets a button bearing the letters "CESPA" over a pair of walking legs. What do the letters mean? "Cotton Ed Smith Pedestrians Association."

Perhaps, after all, there is something in Republican claims of certain Southern States.

U. S. Reveals 'Spy' Contract Of Du Pont Co.

Germans Received Royalties on Arms Sale Here, Report Discloses.

By the Associated Press.

Details of what was characterized as "a most amazing contract" between the Dupont Co. and an agent described as an international spy for the sale of munitions to Germany was dug out yesterday from one of the voluminous reports of the Senate Munitions Committee.

The report said the contract, signed February 1, 1933, was destroyed the next day when "the very questionable nature of some of its provisions was realized," but later the reputed spy was paid $25,000 by the American munitions firm.

The committee disclosed the contract in reviewing the evidence it collected on the re-arming of Germany in violation of the Versailles Treaty. American munitions firms were said to have known of the treaty violation as early as 1924.

At Wilmington, officials of the Dupont Co. refused to comment, saying their answer would be found in the testimony of the hearings.

The report outlined what is described as "close relations" between E. I. duPont de Nemours and Co., largest powder manufacturer on this continent, and the dominant German chemical trust.

As a result of a patent-trading agreement, the Remington Arms Co., a duPont subsidiary, paid royalties to a German "competitor" on sales made by the Remington firm to the United States Government, the report said.

Covering all phases of munitions manufacture and sale, the report was the result of more than two years of inquiry by the Senate Committee, headed by Senator Gerald P. Nye (Republican), of North Dakota.

It said the Pratt & Whitney Co. sold $272,000 worth of airplane parts to Germany in 1933 and $1,455,000 worth during the first half of 1934.

"Most Amazing."

The contract the committe described as "most amazing" was signed February 1, 1933, the committee said, by Felix duPont, vice president of the firm, and "a Mr. Giera, whose real name is alleged to be Peter Brenner and who is reputed to have been an international spy and an agent for 13 governments."

Later a second contract was made, the committee added, but it was canceled April 14, 1933. Giera was paid $25,000 by the du Pont Co., the committee said, although it "actually owed him nothing."

The committee reported that the du Pont firm held a $1,159,904 investment in I. G. Farben Industrie, far-flung German chemical trust, and controlled 7.98 per cent of the voting stock of another Reich explosives manufacturing company, Dynamit Actien-Gesellschaft. The latter block of stock was valued at $892,671.

The same German concern had a patent exchange contract with the Remington Arms Co., which paid it $55,000 in royalties in 1929, 1932 and 1933.

The German company also received one-fourth of the royalty paid by the United States Government to Remington for a certain type of cartridges—a total of $16,745 during the first half of 1934.

"In other words," the committee commented, "though the German munitions companies cannot sell abroad, American companies can sell for them, and to our own Government at that."

The Senate investigators, headed by Senator Nye (Republican), North Dakota, declared in its final report that "the international commercial interests of such large organizations as du Pont and Imperial Chemical Industries may precede in the minds of those companies the importance of national policy. * * *"

"Such considerations of commercial interests were apparently foremost in the rearming of Germany beginning in 1924," the report continued, "and in the sale of a process which could be used to manufacture cheaper munitions in Japan in 1932, shortly after Secretary of State Stimson had taken steps to express the disapproval of this Nation for Japan's military activities in Manchukuo."

When the United States arms embargo prevented direct du Pont sales to certain nations, the committee said, the business was "turned over to Imperial Chemical Industries of England, with whom du Pont maintains the closest of connections, and du Pont was in a position to profit indirectly from any sales made without ostensibly violating the embargo."

Speaking of the sales methods of armament companies, the committee said:

"Not only are such transactions highly unethical, but they carry within themselves the seeds of disturbance to the peace and stability of those nations in which they take place."

It noted, however, that the du Pont company, controlled for 134 years by the same family, is not primarily interested in the munitions business.

Sacramento, Calif., Sept. 17.—Senator William G. McAdoo told the State Democratic Convention today Republican promises of a balanced budget can mean only stoppage of relief work.

In a speech prepared for the meeting, Senator McAdoo listed numerous Administration measures passed "to lick the depression and restore prosperity," then declared Gov. Alf M. Landon and Col. Frank Knox, Republican Presidential and Vice Presidential candidates, oppose them.

"* * * The Republican musketeers, Landon, Knox and Hamilton, boil with indignation about the unbalanced budget," declares McAdoo. "Every implication is that they will balance the budget if intrusted with power.

"What does that mean? It means that all relief work will be stopped * * * and the unemployed and poverty-stricken turned back to every State, city and town in the United States for maintenance and support. This is the only way you can balance the budget."

* * * *

Corvallis, Oreg., Sept. 17 (AP).—Col. Frank Knox, Republican Vice Presidential nominee, asserted in a Constitution Day address tonight the Supreme Court blocked a "course toward ruin" by throwing out New Deal legislation.

President Roosevelt's letter urging a committee to report out the Guffey bill notwithstanding "doubts as to constitutionality, however reasonable" Knox confirmed the Constitution's value as protection "against the day when the Government might fall into the hands of men intoxicated with power and determined to bend the Nation to their will."

He attributed writings to Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace which Knox said suggested "we shall eventually have to scrap the Constitution" and that "blood may be shed" first.

Chicago, Sept. 17 (AP).—Fred S. Purnell, the man behind the Republican oratory of the Presidential campaign, announced today approximately 800 speakers would be touring the country for the party's cause within the next two weeks.

Purnell, as head of the speakers' bureau of the Republican National Committee, already had the services of 500 speakers at his command. He said he proposed to add about 300 more for the final drive in the 30 States of the Western division of the National Committe.

Des Moines, Iowa, Sept. 17 (AP).—Representative William Lemke, Union Party Presidential candidate, suggested today the United States "let international trade take care of itself—it has meant nothing but humiliation and loss to us in the past."

Criticizing policies of the Democratic Administration in an address prepared for delivery before the State convention of the Iowa Farmers Union, the North Dakota Representative asked.

"Why * * * trade away our domestic markets in order that the international manufacturers may sell a little more machinery and electrical equipment in foreign markets on credit—all at the ultimate expense of this Nation?"

A delegation from the Virginia Federation of Labor conveyed to the White House yesterday a set of resolutions unanimously adopted by their State convention indorsing President Roosevelt and urging his reelection.

The committee included Joseph Rossano, Portsmouth, president of the Virginia federation; J. Fred Cherry, Portsmouth, former president and now chairman of the national legislative committee, and E. J. Shave, Newport News, secretary.

The group was received by Marvin J. McIntyre, secretary to the President, who expressed the President's appreciation.

Memphis, Tenn., Sept. 17 (AP).—Norman Thomas demanded today "an absolute end of peonage and the attempt of planters to rule by terrorism" in east Arkansas.

The Socialist Presidential candidate assailed the Roosevelt Administration and Gov. J. M. Futrell, of Arkansas, for what he termed failure to stop "the systematic exploitation of sharecroppers," which he charged involved "night riding, kidnaping and even murder."

Thomas asserted the name of Frank Weems, 40-year-old Negro sharecropper, mysteriously missing since June, "has become a symbol for our shame," and asked Gov. Futrell to produce him or "explain why he can not keep his promise" to do so.

Roosevelt Studies Campaign.

By the Associated Press.

President Roosevelt yesterday surveyed the possibility of expanding his campaign stumping activities, and left at 11 o'clock last night for Cambridge, Mass., where he will participate today in Harvard University's tercentenary observance.

Campaign plans played a prominent part in one of the busiest Presidential days in recent weeks.

From several White House callers came intimations the President's pre-election moves would take him again into Massachusetts, as well as into Nebraska, Missouri, Oklahoma, New Mexico and Colorado.

The President yesterday hurried through a dozen conferences and assembled his Cabinet for what may be its last meeting for some time.

Then in mid-afternoon he turned to preparation of his Harvard address.

Places were set later at the White House dinner table for Chairman James A. Farley, of the Democratic National Committee, and James M. Cox, Ohio publisher, who was Democratic Presidential candidate in 1920 when Mr. Roosevelt was the Vice Presidential candidate.

Gov. Curley of Massachusetts dropped in to talk with the President about arrangements at the Harvard celebration today and as he left the executive office he was asked by reporters whether Mr. Roosevelt planned a campaign address in the Bay State.

"I should judge so," was the reply.

Senator Thomas and Representative Johnson, Oklahoma Democrats, who talked separately with the President, came away voicing a belief that Mr. Roosevelt also might visit their State some time next month.

Johnson said the President had mentioned plans for an Omaha address and Thomas added that he had inquired, too, about the time it would take to travel from St. Louis to Oklahoma City and on to New Mexico and Pueblo and Denver, Colo.

The only Roosevelt speech which the White House has conceded would be of a definitely political nature is set for September 29 when he will appear before the New York State Democratic convention at Syracuse.

Another trip will take him to a festival at Elkins, W. Va., October 1 and to Pittsburgh for another speech the same night.

700 Homeless, Flood Sweeps City in Texas

San Angelo Without Water Supply; 300 Dwellings Washed Away.

By the Associated Press.

San Angelo, Tex., Sept. 17.—More than 700 persons were homeless here tonight as the worst flood in the city's history swept over the business and residential sections.

The entire city of 28,000 population was without water supply as a 50-foot rise in the North Concho River put the pumping plant out of commission. Power lines were down and the city was in darkness.

There was no reported loss of life, but nine persons were marooned in trees and in grave danger.

Three hundred residences were swept into the river, water covered another 200 houses, and a swift current ranging from 12 to 25 feet deep was rushing through part of the business section.

Houston Harte, publisher of the San Angelo Standard Times, estimated the damage at $1,000,000.

Water stood shoulder-deep in the basement of a hospital where there were 125 patients. They were reported in no danger since there was an emergency power plant in operation and hospital authorities had provided an ample supply of food and water. Unless the flood becomes materially worse, no effort will be made to evacuate the patients.

Refugees were housed in churches and schools in elevated parts of the city under Red Cross direction. Robert Bridge, American Red Cross field worker from St. Louis, who was in charge, said there was an adequate supply of food, but warnings were issued for residents to drink only boiled water.

Most wholesale houses in the city still were not in the path of the flood, and food was being distributed from them.

Tropic Storm Roars Toward Cape Hatteras

supplies of canned goods and prepared to hole in.

Coast Guard officials expressed concern for the safety of some 1,500 residents on the Hatteras Banks, a stretch of land running from Nag's Head to Cape Hatteras. Parts of the highway in that region were under water.

A strong wind swept all along the New Jersey coast, kicking up great waves and imperiling hundreds of persons in small boats. The surf was so strong that there were few places for the boats to seek refuge. Fifty of them sought safety in the Mansaquan River Inlet, where two were wrecked and nine persons thrown in the water.

The British ship Ashworth, bound for Brazil.

The German ship Karlanger, bound for New Orleans.

The United Fruit liner Quirigua sailed at noon with 90 passengers for Havana, but anchored in Gravesend Bay to await orders.

The Clyde-Mallory line, operating to Charleston and Jacksonville, warned all its masters to take precautions and announced it would cancel sailings if necessary.

Four hundred CCC youths were removed from camps near Manteo, N. C.

Fearing a repetition of the disastrous blow of 1933, Norfolk was taking elaborate precautions last night. City employes were mobilized and National Guardsmen ordered to their armories. Red Cross officials organized nurses for emergency duty as far west as Richmond.

Coast Guard cutters removed about 200 persons from Little Island, 30 miles south of Virginia Beach, and other vessels were patrolling the area to give assistance to any persons found in the hurricane's path.

At Coast Guard headquarters here, Lieut. Comdr. G. McCabe, officer on watch, said every effort was being made to be of assistance to coastwise shipping and persons in the storm center.

Two amphibian planes, of the flying ambulance type, and five patrol boats have been shifted to the storm center to be ready for rescue work. The planes, sent from Cape May, N. J., will patrol the coast from Norfolk, Va., to Cape Hatteras, dropping hurricane warnings to small craft. One of the planes, McCabe said, will patrol the Chesapeake Bay region, dropping warnings to bay craft.

The cruisers Dione and Murdoc are in the storm area off Cape Hatteras and will be in the storm center until it passes inland. The patrol boats Sebago, Mendota and Pomlito have been shifted from their bases along the Atlantic Coast to the Hampton Roads section.

Two communication trucks, equipped with radio broadcasting and receiving sets, have been dispatched from Jacksonville, Fla., to New Bern, N. C., in the storm's path to assist Red Cross workers and establish contact with outside help should regular means of communication fail.

McCabe said he had received messages from North Carolina Coast Guard stations saying they had ordered inhabitants to higher ground.

In an interview with the United Press, Stephen G. Bashnight, officer in the charge of the Coast Guard station at Nag's Head, N. C., said he had warned vacationists in hotels and cottages that a big storm was expected.

"Most of them have left," he said. "It's 4 p. m. now and the wind is blowing about 45 miles an hour. The barotmeter is falling. We ought to have right much of a blow before morning.

"I've been instructed to provide shelter for the women and children. In my mind that means we're in for a pretty bad storm because we've never received instructions like that before. We're standing by here. There are 12 of us. We'll be on duty until it's over."

Red Cross headquarters here also was prepared for a major storm. A headquarters for emergency relief was set up at Elizabeth City, N. C., with Maurice Reddy and George Myer, veterans in such work, in charge.

The report of the Weather Bureau, issued at 10 p. m. said:

"The severe tropical storm was centered at 7 p. m. about one hundred miles southeast of Cape Hatteras, N. C. It center will pass over or near Cape Hatteras tonight about 2 a. m. and present indications are it will pass near Virginia Capes about noon Friday. As a result, winds of hurricane force are expected from Cape Hatteras to Norfolk, Va., tonight and Friday forenoon and northeast gales north of Virginia Capes in lower Chesapeake Bay and along the Maryland-Delaware and New Jersey coasts tonight and Friday. High tides will prevail from Cape Hatteras to New Jersey coast.

Musician Grilled In Killing of Wife

Trenton, N. J., Sept. 17 (AP).—The past life of soft-spoken Ramon Cota, who led detectives to the cellar grave of his wife, held the attention today of three police agencies.

Investigators said they sought to trace two other women, with whom the 45-year-old musician said he had lived.

Miss Mary Miller, Cota's 20-year-old housekeeper, is being held in $300 bail on a statutory charge.

Cota, whose year of married life with the former Emily Riedel, was described by police as one of ease and luxurious living on her estimated $10,000 savings, held doggedly today to his story he killed her in self-defense. Missing three months, the woman's body was found yesterday in a 5-foot grave in the cellar of their home. The skull was fractured.

Pennsylvania Held In Republican Fold

The trend in Pennsylvania has shifted, and today is decidedly Republican, with positive leanings toward Gov. Landon, Raymond W. Bellamy, assistant director of the Republican labor bureau of the Republican National Committee, said yesterday.

Bellamy arrived in Washington after a tour of Pennsylvania, during which time he talked to labor leaders in the mining districts, as well as to business men up and down the State.

Edith Maxwell Release Likely In a Few Days

Attorneys to Ask for Bond Tomorrow; Move to Be Unopposed.

Edith Maxwell, pretty, 22-year-old mountain school teacher, who has been in jail since July, 1935, on a charge of murdering her father, will in all likelihood be released on bond within the next few days.

Her attorneys, Charles Henry Smith, of Alexandria, and M. J. Fulton, of Richmond, will go to Big Stone Gap, Va., tomorrow, and ask Circuit Judge H. A. W. Skeen to set the bond.

Judge Skeen presided at Miss Maxwell's trial in Wise, Va., last November when she was found guilty of murder in the first degree and sentenced to 25 years in the penitentiary. The severity of this sentence brought protest from all over the world.

A week ago the Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals decided that the sentence was not justified by the evidence, and ordered a new trial.

The release of Miss Maxwell, who has contended she struck her father with a slipper while he was beating her in a drunken rage, is the first objective of Attorneys Smith and Fulton. A change of venue is the second objective. They will contend that she cannot get a fair trial in Wise County.

Fred Greear, Commonwealth's attorney of Wise, yesterday said he would not oppose the release of Miss Maxwell on bond pending a new trial.

"It makes no difference to me whether she has bond or not," he said.

G. O. P. Charges Waste in Killing U. S. Livestock

Affidavits Citing the Forced Slaughter Proffered by Committee.

The Republican National Committee last night condemned what was termed "wasteful slaughter of food supplies" by the Agricultural Adjustment Administration.

In a statement, the committee said it had affidavits and photographs to show livestock were killed by "New Deal agents," although "in some instances offers were made by public-minded persons to buy the calves and pigs from the growers at the price the Government had agreed to pay" and to turn them over to relief organizations.

The committee said the affidavits were from Dr. B. G. Williams, of Oskaloosa, Iowa, and John H. Saucke, a farmer near Farnhamville, Calhoun County, Iowa.

Forced Slaughter Charged.

Saucke, the committee contended, was forced under terms of his AAA contract in February, 1935, to slaughter 45 pigs in violation of a State law forbidding any person or corporation to "wilfully destroy or negligently suffer to go to waste with intent to increase the price" of any food product.

Dr. Williams' affidavit said 82 calves were shot down near Oskaloosa by men employed for that work by an agent of the Agriculture Department. It said Dr. Williams offered to buy the calves and feed them until they were large enough to be slaughtered, and then to turn them over to the local relief agency without charge. The offer was refused, he said.

The animals were said to have been killed and their carcasses dumped into a specially dug pit, after the hides had been slashed so they could not be recovered and used.

William Hard, in a radio speech under auspices of the committee, said the consumer had "retaliated" to New Deal efforts to lift pork prices "by buying less pork—and much less."

"Perceiving this fact," Hard said, "the Agricultural Adjustment Administration now begins to try to put the blame on the drought of 1934 and the drought of this year. It charges these two droughts with the responsibility for the great decline in the number of hogs on farms."

Hard argued that this was "a change from previous views expressed and claims made by AAA officials. He quoted Secretary Wallace as saying in December, 1935, that "the pig crop in 1934 was smaller than it would have been had farmers not entered into the AAA adjustment contracts." In February, this year, Hard said, "the Bureau of Agricultural Economics said: 'Two years of production control and one year of drought have brought significant changes in livestock numbers.'"

WHAT TO DO FOR ECZEMA ITCHING AND BURNING

Wash the affected parts with Resinol Soap and warm water to soften scales and crusts. Resinol Soap is suggested because it contains no excess of free alkali, and is especially suited to tender skin. Dry by patting with a soft cloth—do not rub.

Doctors recommend an oily ointment because it penetrates the outer layers of the skin more effectively. Resinol Ointment meets this requirement, and does even more. For over 40 years it has been—and still is—successfully used to relieve quickly the itching and burning of eczema. It contains soothing ingredients that aid healing.

Use Resinol Ointment today and enjoy comfort tomorrow. Get a jar, also a cake of Resinol Soap, at any drug store. For free sample, write to Resinol, Dept. 1, Baltimore, Md.

Roosevelt Asks Nation for Aid In Chest Drives

300 Welfare Leaders Hear Plea; Baker, Swope Stress Needs.

Councils, Inc., and Secretary of War under President Woodrow Wilson, took this theme, the necessity to build character, as the basis of an address in the afternoon session in the Mayflower Hotel.

Baker summed up the problem of his address, titled "Future Responsibilities," in King David's question in the Bible, "Is it well with the child?"

He asked that the point made by several speakers, that "Man cannot live by bread alone," be used as a guide by the workers in social service agencies.

"We should not be fooled by the present popular materialistic philosophy of life," he said. "We must not let our society become shiny and shallow.

"Somehow we'll solve the economic problem. Our country produces enough goods. We can build enough houses to take care of everyone. Our great problem is to strengthen, not enfeeble, character."

Survey Needed.

Baker asked that the social services divorce themselves from the "traditional avenues of service," and pointed to the "great need for a clean slate survey" of the actual needs of many communities. He premised his belief that there is danger of "allowing our social services to become too traditional" in method and extent, on a survey made by two social welfare workers in Cleveland.

There a section with a population of about 15,000, between "the churches of the well to do" on the one hand and "the stacks of great mills" on the other, was surveyed, according to Mr. Baker, with the resultant disclosure that none of the present Cleveland social agencies are penetrating the area effectively.

A majority of yesterday's speakers remarked on the recovery trend. President Roosevelt mentioned "returning prosperity" several times, saying that while "it means that you have a right to expect greater assistance for your splendid work," it also "means that a vast amount of important work which all of us had to defer during depression years, can and must be taken up anew."

Position Better.

The President expressed the view that this return of prosperity should mean an extension of charitable activities in private fields, saying:

"When human distress reaches the point that Government assistance is necessary, Government up to the limit of its local, its State and its Federal resources must and does act. Happily, private organizations are now in a better position to accomplish greater things than for many years past."

The President's move to shift more of the responsibility for relief to private agencies, who will depend more this year upon the gifts of great corporations, according to Mr. Swope, recalled that somewhat over a year ago the President sharply criticised the contributions of corporations to charity as, in effect, buying public good will with gifts. He said on July 24, 1935, at a press conference, that he opposed the granting of tax exemption to corporations for charity contributions. He stated then that he did not believe corporations should be allowed to purchase good will and then obtain a tax reduction on the sum spent.

A tax bill, however, granting corporations up to a 5 per cent deduction on net income for charity contributions, was later passed and signed. Mr. Swope said yesterday that he hoped numerous corporations would give at least 2 or 3 per cent of their net income to charity, but that he didn't expect many to contribute that heavily. A major problem of the present meet, to be studied today, will be the setting up of a yardstick method of determining how much a corporation should give, according to its size and the extent of its operations.

After the address from the White House, where the President expressed profound regret at Mrs. Roosevelt's inability to appear, due to illness, the women delegates adjourned to the state dining room for discussion, joining the men later at a luncheon.

There, Mrs. Harper Sibley, wife of the president of the United States Chamber of Commerce, and Dr. Thomas Parran, U. S. Surgeon General, spoke. Mrs. Sibley stressed the spiritual necessity in relief measures, and Dr. Parran said that the Government Health Service touched daily only a small segment of public health needs.

Stillman Westbrook, president of Community Chest & Councils, Inc., and vice president of the Aetna Life Insurance Co., of Hartford, said in a statistical address in the afternoon that there are now 419 Community Chests, which raised last year $76,127,000 for social service this year. Only 12 cities of over 100,000 population do not have Chests, he added, and estimated that about 250,000 people are actively engaged in Chest work during the campaigns.

At a dinner in the ballroom of the Mayflower last night, Charles P. Taft, member of the Republican strategy board of Gov. Alf M. Landon of Kansas, discussed the youth agencies of the Chests. He said there is no youth movement in this country, adding, "And I am glad of it."

"Youth belongs in the middle of things helping to run them, not off by itself, grumbling and demanding. Youth was in the saddle in 1775 and 1787. I believe it is regaining its place in public life and in our Community Chest movement in 1936."

He lauded the youth agencies for their unsentimental approach to their problem, and praised in particular the efforts to treat each young person as an individual and not as a part of a mob.

Miss Dorothy Thompson, author and news commentator, and wife of Sinclair Lewis, in the initial address at the dinner outlined the background of the revolutions in Europe, which she said "are revolutions of youth." Her speech traced the coming battle between fascism and democracy. She said:

"There is a better conception of society than that of the anthill or that of the regiment. It is a picture of society as an orchestra."

Her ideal system of society, she said, would be co-operative in the complete sense of the word.

Text of President's Address

Once more I greet the representatives of our great annual mobilization for human needs.

We are all heartened by clear evidences of returnng prosperity. You are here in spite of that fact and because of that fact. Returning prosperity means that you have a right to expect greater assistance for your splendid work in every community. Returning prosperity means, however, that a vast amount of important work which all of us had to defer during the depression years, can and must be taken up anew.

As I told you in former years, when human distress reaches the point that Government assistance is necessary, Government up to the limit of its local, its State and its Federal resources must and does act. Happily, private organizations are now in a better position to accomplish greater things than for many years past. Increase in prosperity heightens the obligation of every individual to aid in the relief of distress in his or her own community.

Through you I appeal to every man, woman and child in the United States for a revival throughout the length and breadth of the land of the spirit of charity. But "revival" is not the right word—for in the difficult years which have passed that spirit of charity showed itself unselfishly and generously. Increase of the spirit of charity would be a better way of putting it—for I am very proud of the support of the country's welfare services of all kinds in the past seven years.

I resent and you resent, I am sure, those supercilious and uncharitable sneers which from a small element among us have been directed against those in need and against those who were honestly seeking to help those in need.

The co-operation given by the Federal Government in social welfare activities extends rather than contracts the responsibility of private activities for local relief.

Since the low point of the depression great and substantial progress has been made. The National income will soon be double what it was then. Nearly six million more men and women are now at work in private industry. Three million others are engaged in useful work provided or assisted by Government. Factory payrolls the first quarter of this year were more than $70,000,000 greater each week than they were in the first quarter of 1933. Systematic and successful efforts to raise the buying power of wage earners and farmers have increased the business of merchants and brought orders to manufacturers. Confidence has returned to the great mass of our people; confidence on the part of all except a small minority who seek to profit from the preaching of fear.

Personal and family insecurity—that difficult problem of past years—your Government has undertaken at least to dissipate in part by the enactment of the social security act providing for cooperative Federal and State public welfare, public assistance, unemployment compensation and old age benefits.

To the extent that local and State and Federal government helps in these fields, to that extent private welfare activities are freed from these appropriate public responsibilities and, therefore, are enabled more effectively and extensively to do those things which private activities are best fitted to carry out.

Efforts of private agencies to encourage private re-employment of those on the relief rolls; efforts of private agencies to continue and extend medical care of all kinds; efforts of private agencies to minister to the hundreds of thousands of cases which present special problems; efforts of private agencies to build up recreational opportunities—all of these and many more are tasks more fitted to private than to Government administration.

The generosity of our American people is a fine tradition—we have never failed to heed the call of distress. I have confidence that the appeal about to be launched for this fifth mobilization for human needs will strike a responsive chord throughout the country. I know that the men and women of the Nation will accept their local responsibilities even more readily than they have ever done before. May you have the success you deserve.

Roper Warns U. S. Business On War Profit

Secretary Tells Commerce Council Nation Must Trade Cautiously.

By the Associated Press.

A blunt warning that American business must sacrifice war profits to maintain peace was issued yesterday by Secretary Roper.

Telling the Business Advisory Council that "we must keep out of war," the usually soft-spoken Commerce Department chief added that industry should avoid trade "that might involve us in war"

"We wish to pursue trade generally," he said, "but in such a manner that we will not seek war-period orders that might involve us in war and embarrass business in getting ultimately larger trade possibilities under peace conditions."

He urged that "long-time safe and sound business contracts and trade opportunities" not be sacrificed "for temporary orders created by war conditions."

Says Depression's Gone.

The council, composed of business men who offer the Commerce Department advice on economic questions, also heard Roper assert that the depression is "past." And that "we must seek and devise methods of adjusting our governmental agencies to normal conditions through consolidation and other methods looking to more efficient and less expensive operations."

Roper called for "still greater attention" to the problem of putting more people to work in private enterprise and suggested that the council encourage a broad five to 10-year home building program.

Such a program, he said, "would take up a great deal of the employment slack would stimulate activitiy with the consequent re-employment in other fields.

Roper laid before the council a proposal for organization of an agency within the Commerce Department to make continuing studies of industrial economics. Such an agency, he said, would provide data for business and industry similar to that supplied agriculture by the Bureau of Agricultural Economics.

Studies of industrial economics were launched after the death of NRA, but this work will be ended in December.

NRA Issue Dodged.

The Commerce head said it "is not my desire to suggest a revival of NRA," but added he felt an agency to gather general economic information might prove valuable to business.

He asked the council to make suggestions on whether the agency was needed, and if so, how it could best be organized.

Roper, who recently returned from Europe, said that after studying economic and social conditions there "no thoughtful American business man" could avoid the conclusion "that it is well for us in the United States to seek proper readjustments in our economic and social segments in the interest of wise and co-operative understanding and thereby avoid the European extremes."

He expressed gratification at American business activity during the summer and asserted "this signifies that business recognizes the stability and soundness of our recovery."

With business continuing to improve, he added, economic conditions will improve accordingly and more people will be employed."

2 Alaska Airmen Hunt Polar Waves

Fairbanks, Alaska, Sept. 17 (AP). Two Fairbanks airmen scouted the northern skies today in a hunt for high-flying polar cold waves—so Americans will know when to don overcoats.

A six-month series of daily flights into the atmosphere three miles above the earth have been contracted for by Pilot Harold Gillam, Fairbanks aviator. He will be aided by Pilot Bert Lien.

Gillam's specially-equipped plane will soar into the Arctic skies, its weather observing instruments read and the results wirelessed to the Weather Bureau in Washington, D. C., this winter out of the air-scouts' data, meteorologists hope to have fore-knowledge of polar air masses much earlier than by the present system of observations which must wait for the cold waves to dip down to earth.

Leader Warns Coast Strikers Of 'Death Trap'

City Manager Denies He Said Salinas Officers Are Out of Control.

By the Associated Press.

Salinas, Calif., Sept. 17.—A leader's warning that "massacre awaits you" today kept striking lettuce workers off Salinas streets, guarded by 1,000 deputized citizens with riot clubs ready.

The warning came from A. S. Doss, secretary of the Fruit and Vegetable Workers Union, who charged a "wholesale murder trap" had been set for the 5,200 strikers.

Doss asserted City Manager Vic Barlogio admitted law enforcement officers are "entirely out of control and that there is no law in Salinas at the present time."

Barlogio denied having made the statement.

Despite the lull following Doss' warning to strikers not to assemble in groups, the little city of 12,000 had the appearance of being in a state of siege.

250 Deputies Added.

Sheriff Carl Abbott quickly swore in 250 more citizens to bring his special deputy strength to the 1,000 mark. They patrolled streets which they cleared of strikers yesterday in a "flying wedge" movement.

Regular deputies, city police with new supplies of tear and nauseating gas and 130 State highway patrolmen reinforced the special officers.

Lettuce packing by nonunion workers continued without any show of violence such as marked the preceding two days in which ten persons were injured.

Union workers are seeking preference in employment. Lettuce growers and shippers rejected the demand. The rejection led to the walkout and the producers then recruited outside help to harvest the rich lettuce crop.

Minneapolis, Sept. 17 (AP).—Appeals for action by city and State officials were prepared today as two major strikes for union recognition continued with no immediate prospects for settlement.

Knud Wefald, member of the State railroad and warehouse commission, asked Gov. Hjalmar Petersen to do what he could to end the walkout of Flour, Feed, Cereal and Elevator Workers Union, No. 19132, which for nearly a month has tied up the city's milling industry. Two mills resumed milling this week, one of them still picketed and guarded by police today. Gov. Petersen already had issued one appeal for quick settlement.

Meanwhile, a committee of Retail Grocers Association members drafted an appeal to Mayor Thomas E. Latimer, asking him to use his influence to settle the strike of General Drivers Union, No. 544, members employed in the wholesale grocery industry, who walked out in mid-August.

Cummings Bids For Tolerance On Constitution

New Deal to Keep Within 'Existing Institutions,' He Tells Club.

The Administration will continue to solve the problems confronting the Nation "within the framework of existing institutions," Attorney General Homer S. Cummings promised a Kiwanis Club luncheon at Washington yesterday celebrated the 149th birthday of the Constitution.

Patriotic groups throughout the city held celebrations, climaxed last night at Memorial Continental Hall with a combined ceremony by several patriotic groups headed by the Daughters of the American Revolution.

Trees were planted throughout the country to commemorate the event. The bronze and marble framework, in which the original copy of the fundamental law is enshrined at the Library of Congress, was polished up for an estimated 5,000 visitors.

Bastian, Bloom Talk.

Orators, such as Walter M. Bastian, president of the District Bar Association, and Representative Sol Bloom, director of the Constitution's forthcoming sesquicentennial celebration, gave radio talks.

Speaking to more than 200 members of the Washington Kiwanis Club at the Mayflower, and to a Nation-wide radio audience, Cummings made a vigorous plea for tolerance by groups which differ radically in their interpretation of the document.

He went at length into the controversies which have surrounded the Constitution ever since its birth, and pointed out that even the Supreme Court had reversed its decisions several times.

"This," he said, "is not to be deplored. It is not a symptom of disease; it is, rather, a proof of health. It is the evidence of life and growth; and America is a vital and a growing nation."

He quoted a recent address of Chief Justice Charles Evans Hughes, in which the latter said: "When we deal with questions relating to principles of law and their application, we do not suddenly rise into a stratosphere of icy certainty."

Cummings was introduced by George W. Offutt, jr., Bynum E. Hinton, president of the club, presided, and Edwin F. Hill was master of ceremonies. The speech was preceded by a series of tableaux depicting the founding of the nation and the signing of the Constitution.

Charles Lathrop Pack, president of the American Tree Association, spoke over a national radio hook-up in the afternoon to explain the drive of the association to have more than 30,000,000 trees planted during the coming year. The association at the same time distributed 500,000 booklets describing its campaign. The Kiwanis Club of Fredericksburg, Va., planted commemorative trees there yesterday.

Radio Talks Given.

At 6:45 p. m., Bastian and Beatrice Clephane, president of the Women's Bar Association, spoke over Station WRC on the Constitution in a program sponsored by the American citizenship committee of the association.

Bastian declared the Nation was born in the form of the Constitution, in the spirit of equality of rights and equality of opportunity; that it provided a new conception of free men, without discrimination, with personal rights and private property rights all enforced and protected by the legal system established and outlined in the Constitution.

The National Capital Republican Club observed the anniversary with a joint meeting of the club and the League of Republican Women at 8:30 p. m. Samuel J. Prescott presided.

S. Wallace Dempsey, former Representative from New York, delivered an address on the Constitution. About 100 attended the meeting.

At the Daughters of the America exercises at Memorial Continental Hall, James Quarles, former Missouri judge and professor of law at Washington and Lee University, explained the purposes the founding fathers had in mind when they drew up the Constitution.

"The Constitution is a conglomeration of ideas of government evolved over a long period of time," he said. "It was couched in general terms and thus rather enumerated than defined the powers of the various branches of the government."

Other addresses were delivered by Charles Y. Latimer, president of the District chapter of the Sons of the American Revolution, and Mrs. James Henry Harper, State director of the Children of the American Revolution. Mrs. Charles Carroll Haig, state regent of the D. A. R., presided.

public health center will not be incorporated in the main budget.

However, there is every indication that one of the centers, which would cost $250,000, is to be included in the supplemental estimates of projects considered worthy by the District heads, but dependent upon the finding of additional sources of revenue.

Spokesmen for the District Medical Society opposed the health centers at a public hearing last week on the ground that they would constitute a step toward state medicine. A hearing will be granted by the society's executive committee upon Dr. Ruhland's return to Washington, nevertheless, and compromise may be agreed upon.

The health officer insists that the public health centers would not represent a move toward state medicine, but merely a more efficient and effective operation of clinics. He has pointed out that most Washington private physicians could not afford to treat the patients who would be acceptable at the health centers.

Operated in N. Y.

Similar large-scale clinics are in operation in New York City and other progressive municipalities, he said.

Due to the absence of Dr. Ruhland, the Health Department estimates were explained yesterday to the Commissioners by Dr. Daniel L. Seckinger, assistant health officer.

Dr. Seckinger is understood to have emphasized the high comparative death rate in Washington and the low per capita expenditures for public health.

The Commissioners today will consider the estimates of the public schools and then will conclude the marking up of the budget for transmission to the Budget Bureau.

Because the Board of Education has asked for $5,030,659 more than current appropriations, large slashes in the $17,525,619 requests are expected to be made. As in past years, it is presumed the schools will be selected according to the priority list compiled by the board.

'Muzzle' Knox, Is Democratic Speaker's Tip

Nominee Oversteps Self in Piling Up Calumny, Bethesdans Told.

Declaring "it appears that the Republican Vice Presidential candidate has overstepped himself in his enthusiasm to pile calumny upon the head of President Roosevelt and his Administration," Francis B. Taylor, jr., of the Democratic National Committee, last night told the Young Men's Democratic Club, of Bethesda, Md., that "so mendacious a man as this should be muzzled."

Pointing out that executives of the country's largest insurance organizations had met with President Roosevelt without sharp words, and that none of them had any doubts as to the soundness of their respective companies despite Col. Knox's statements to the contrary, Taylor declared the truth was that the combined assets of all life insurance companies increased more than $3,000,000 between January 1, 1935, and June 30 of this year, and that 2,000,000 more policies were in force than four years ago.

Taylor cited a report of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, showing a ten per cent increase in the deposits of the 14,506 banks covered by insurance. These banks hold 97 per cent of the deposits of the United States, he said. He scoffed at the claim of Senator Vandenburg (Republican), of Michigan, that he and declared such insurance was adwas father of the deposit insurance vocated first in the 1908 Democratic platform.

"Coincident with these encouraging reports," he said, "the Manufacturers Trust Co., one of the largest of New York City banks, announced that it had doubled its annual dividend rate. This action was taken in the face of the Knox assertion that financial institutions faced absolute ruin from Roosevelt's money policies. It would be odd indeed for a bank of this caliber to increase the stockholders' returns if the balance sheet did not show increased earnings and if the directors were not reasonably certain of continued improvement."

Interest Mounts In Red Cross Call

As organization plans for the District Red Cross Roll Call campaign near completion, increasing evidence of the enthusiasm and interest citizens of Washington are taking in the drive was manifest in the scores of volunteer workers who are calling at campaign headquarters, 1416 H street northwest, offering their services, it was reported.

Lloyd B. Wilson, president of the Chesapeake and Potomac Telephone Co., and chairman of the campaign which starts September 27, said:

"I can't tell you how much it pleases me to have all of these people so generously offering to help us. It is an indication of the caliber of our citizens, and also it illustrates the esteem in which Washington holds the Red Cross.

"The organization is truly the 'People's Red Cross' and I think Admiral Grayson, national chairman, well expressed this thought when he said: 'Anybody may belong to it—anybody may work for it—anybody may benefit from it—it belongs to the People.'"

Wallace Signs D. C. Milk Pact Dated Monday

New Agreement to Benefit Producers; AAA Denies Price Rise Likely.

Secretary Wallace yesterday signed a marketing agreement putting the Federal Government in control of milk distribution in the Washington area effective at 12:01 a. m. Monday.

The Secretary's signature was affixed to the agreement, the Agricultural Adjustment Administration announced, after approval by 84 per cent of the producers supplying milk to the Washington market.

Officials of the AAA stoutly denied reports prevailing since terms of the agreement were worked out in turbulent hearings here last July, that a rise in the price of milk to the District consumer would result.

Under the agreement, Secretary Wallace will appoint a Federal milk administrator for this area to whom distributors will report receipts from producers each month together with data on its use and sales. From this information uniform prices are to be computed.

Other leading provisions of the agreement were:

Breakdown of milk into two classes according to use.

Fixed price to be paid farmers with differentials for butterfat content and premiums to be paid producers for quality milk.

Equitable payments to all producers on the basis of a minimum-price schedule of $3.02 a hundredweight for basic milk, $2.62 a hundredweight for class 1 milk and the present ice cream price available to the Maryland and Virginia Milk Producers Association for class 2 milk.

Reed Discusses 'Impeachment' For Roosevelt

Cites Part of President's Talk on 'Shackling' of Liberties.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Sept. 17.—Former Senator James A. Reed, of Missouri, using a statement attributed to President Roosevelt as the basis of his remarks, devoted a major portion of an address today to a hypothetical discussion of "impeachment."

Reed, an organizer of the anti-Administration "Jeffersonian Democratic" group, told members of the Chicago Bar Association:

"If a courageous and independent House of Representatives had presented articles of impeachment against Mr. Roosevelt containing the single charge: 'He has been guilty of high crimes and misdemeanors in this, to wit, that he has set up powers which may be so exercised as to provide shackles for the liberties of the American people,' and presented that article of impeachment to the Senate, and had there proved the truth of the charge, a Senate composed of honest and fearless men would have been obliged, under their oaths as judges, to sustain the bill of impeachment."

Reed asserted that on January 3, 1936, the President set forth in a message to Congress:

"They (the economic autocracy) realize that in 34 months we have built up instruments of public power. In the hands of a people's government, this power is wholesome and proper, but in the hands of political puppets of an economic autocracy such power would provide shackles for the liberties of the American people."

"Whether rightly or wrongfully employed by the present Administration," Reed said, "if powers have been set up by which 'shackles can be riveted upon the American people,' then three things follow."

He said these three things were:

"1. The creation of such powers is in direct defiance of the principles of the Declaration of Independence and of the entire Constitution of the United States.

"2. That he who created such a power in defiance of the Constitution has violated his solemn oath of office.

"3. That if powers 'to place shackles upon the liberties of the American people' have been set up by one man or one Administration, they can be exercised by any succeeding Administration or by any dictator who may by stealth or violence gain power."

D. C. Cripple Dies After Knife Fight

Stab wounds in his chest inflicted early yesterday morning during a park brawl were fatal to John Shepherd, 40, one-armed newspaper vendor.

Shepherd, with Joseph Jubilo, 59, were attacked in the park near Seventh street and Constitution avenue shortly after midnight by three white men. The men fled after the fight, leaving Shepherd and Jubilo seriously wounded in the park.

Police took the men to Casualty Hospital. Shepherd died a few hours later. Jubilo was treated for severe cuts to his head and face. One gash narrowly missed cutting his eye. Jubilo was said to be in an improved condition last night.

Detective Sergts. Walter Beck and John Wise, who are investigating the case, ordered two men held at the First Precinct and two at the Fourth on information furnished by passersby who said they saw three men run from the park. No charges have been placed against them.

Jubilo, police said, identified a picture of one of his assailants, but was unable in his weakened condition to tell police how the fight started.

Roosevelt Visits Harvard Today For Celebration

John Masefield Also Will Participate in Program at Tercentenary.

Cambridge, Mass., Sept. 17.—Harvard's 300th birthday celebration reaches its climax tomorrow with President Roosevelt, class of '04, and John Masefield, England's poet-laureate, participating in ceremonies during which honorary degrees will be conferred upon 62 world-famed scholars.

Mr. Roosevelt's appearance here will be the third at his alma mater within the past two years. In February, 1935, he came here when his son, Franklin D., jr., now a senior, was initiated into Harvard's Fly Club. Last February the President repeated the visit when his youngest son, John, now a junior, also was initiated into the club.

Feature of the second day's events of the 300th anniversary celebration today was the tercentenary meeting of associated Harvard clubs at which President James Bryant Conant of Harvard was chief speaker.

Only in Infancy.

Conant told more than 10,000 alumni and guests, including the world's greatest assemblage of scholars, that education is only in its infancy.

More than 500 official delegates from nearly 400 universities, colleges and learned societies in 48 States and 38 foreign countries were in the audience.

Germany was the only major nation not represented by at least one accredited university. This absence was interpreted by observers as a snub in retaliation for Harvard's refusal to accept a gift from Dr. Ernst Hanfstaengl, Harvard alumnus and Hitler propagandist.

Letters Opened.

During today's meeting, which actually marked the reconvening of that adjourned 100 years ago at Harvard's bicentennial celebration, Conant reported on the contents of a packet of letters, including one from Ralph Waldo Emerson, placed in the university's archives a century ago.

The packet, sealed by the then President Josiah Quincy, was opened ten days ago by Conant at a meeting of alumni.

Before Conant adjourned the meeting until 2036, he sealed a package to be placed in Harvard archives with instructions that it be opened by the Harvard president at the 400th anniversary celebration. The package contained letters from university officials addressed to their successors 100 years hence.

Served in France.

In the World War he was executive officer of the Judge Advocate General's Corps in France. He had lived in Washington since his retirement and many times during his years of active duty.

Born in Niles, Mich., the son of Gen. Henry A. and Isabelle Graves Morrow, he was graduated with a law degree from the University of Michigan in 1889. He was a member of the Delta Upsilon legal fraternity.

He joined the Army as a first lieutenant at the outbreak of the Spanish-American War, and was attached to the Third Nebraska Infantry. During the Philippine insurrection, he was an adjutant with the Thirty-second United States Volunteers.

Entered Army in 1901.

He entered the Regular Army in February, 1901, as a first lieutenant of infantry. Six months later he was transferred to the cavalry, where he served for two years until joining, with the rank of major, the Judge Advocate General's Department, where he served for the ensuing quarter of a century.

He was made a colonel in December, 1918. He served in Washington from 1909 to 1913 and again from shortly after the war until 1924, when he was transferred to New York. He returned here for the last year of his active duty and retired because of age October 29, 1928.

Red Men Open Drive on Reds At D. C. Session

Lodge Convention Hears Attack on Communism, Aliens in U. S.

A campaign against communism in the United States was sponsored yesterday by the Improved Order of Red Men, in session at the Willard Hotel.

The step followed plans formulated by the fraternity for the furtherance of its program of Americanism, which for the past two years has been led by Arthur J. Ruland, Great Icohonee.

Deportation of "dangerous aliens" who refuse to become citizens of the United States also was urged by the order.

"The American democracy is peculiar to this country," Ruland said in an address last night.

"It could not flourish in any patrician country."

Ruland made a plea for the return to the faith of the first Americans "in God and their fellow men."

"Amidst raucous and discordant noises," said he, "promises of panaceas and millenniums, screeching and screaming newspaper headlines, pied pipers who are leading us on toward mirages in the desert which, when we find them, have disappeared into nothingness, excesses of partisanship have combined to produce a great fear complex—a great state of unrest in this American Nation.

"So we say that more than a leveling of our social inequalities, or a change in our economic system, we need to restore in the hearts and minds of Americans the faith of our fathers in God and their fellow men."

Union Head Will Seek To Settle Ship Strike

New York, Sept. 17 (AP).—John Green, president of the Industrial Union of Marine and Shipbuilding Workers of America, arrived from Washington tonight to attempt to settle the strike of union members which tied up work at a Staten Island shipyard and postponed indefinitely the launching of a United States Navy destroyer scheduled for yesterday.

About 300 employes not members of the union continued work at the yard today after the yard owners, United Drydocks, Inc., terminated a "sit-down" strike of 2,000 union members by excluding them from the plant.

Virginian Dies As Street Car Crashes Auto

LANGROCK FINE CLOTHES

"This is my third Langrock Suit"

"I used to wear cheap clothes because I had the misconception that as the price was low I was practicing economy. But I noticed that a low-priced suit needed continual pressing and, in a few months, became very ordinary looking.

"A business man whose appearance I admired told me that he always wore LANGROCK Clothes. He advised me to buy one Langrock Suit and make it the nucleus of my wardrobe. I did so. Now I have three Langrock Suits that will give me years of satisfactory service, and I always look well dressed."

A Langrock Suit is a mighty good investment because it is authentically styled, distinguished in appearance, and has the soft-finish hand tailoring that makes it hold its shape indefinitely.

Legion to Show War Linotype, Still Used Here

G.P.O. 'Pershing Machine' Will Be Exhibited at Cleveland.

A linotype machine which went to war with Gen. Pershing did printing for the Army in France, returned to America after the armistice safe and sound, and now is clacking out printing slugs in the Government Printing Office in Washington, will be one of the main exhibits of the American Legion National Convention at Cleveland, Ohio, next week.

They call it "The Pershing Machine" down at the Government Printing Office, where it has remained in obscurity from the public—but not from work—since the World War.

Gen. Pershing took the machine to France with him and continentalized it. He had French type faces put on the machine and the linotype printed words in French for the rest of the war.

After the war the linotype was brought back to Washington, its type face was changed back to English, and for 17 years employes at the Government Printing Office have used it.

The linotype will be exhibited by the Government Printing Office Post of the American Legion. After years of obscurity it will be placed under unwinking floodlights. James M. Kreiter, who operated the Pershing machine during the World War, will exhibit the linotype. Kreiter is still employed at the printing office and still is operating the machine.

Also at the convention will be Public Printer A. E. Giegengack, who will be a delegate from the District of Columbia. Edward R. Dixon, commander of Government Printing Office American Legion, Post No. 33, Department of D. C., helped make arrangements to have the Pershing machine shipped to Cleveland.

His Garage Stolen, District Man Calls For Sherlock Here

Detective Sergt. Thomas F. Sweeney busily thumbed through his copies of Sherlock Holmes last night in hope of finding a clew that might help him solve the District's latest crime.

For Al Perruso, of 805 North Capitol street, reported someone had stolen his garage.

The garage, Perruso said, was a sheet-metal affair, and it was taken from the rear of 1214 North Capitol street. No automobile was in it at the time, but Perruso was somewhat apprehensive lest the thief return and take his house.

Art for Art's Sake or Realism, Attorneys Protest Technique

Justice Department Mural Starts Controversy Among Lawyers.

What with all the mural painting going on in the Department of Justice these days, Uncle Sam's lawyers, long accustomed to the well-defined proceedings of the courts, are becoming aware of esthetics. There's a battle on between the realists and those who believe in artistic license and the phrase "significant form" is getting to be heard almost as frequently as "habeas corpus."

Most of the controversy centers around a panel at the right of the entrance to the Attorney General's office. The painting, by Henry Varnum Poor, shows an attorney arguing before the Supreme Court with his back turned to the justices.

Newspaper headlines and piles of coins at the bottom of the picture show the argument to be the celebrated gold case, in which Attorney General Cummings presented the Government's side. There are some who say that the attorney in the painting is supposed to be the Attorney General.

Should Face Court.

Stickler for legal procedure among the Government lawyers maintain that the attorney should be facing the Supreme Court. In one of the New Deal cases, they say, an attorney was asked by the court to address his remarks to the bench instead of the spectators.

The more liberal-minded, however, uphold the side of artist. What kind of a picture would it be, they ask, if there were only the shiny back of a bald head right in the center? It's only allegorical after all, they say.

The controversy over the picture doesn't stop with the position of the central figure. There is also controvery about his identity and about the identity of the justices portrayed in the background.

Some say that the attorney is undoubtedly supposed to represent Cummings. This group has a theory that in the original sketch the face was unmistakably that of the Attorney General. Since then, they say, it has been altered.

Cummings Doesn't Know.

Others of the amateur art critics hold that the pleader is certainly not Cummings and never was intended to be. The Attorney General himself, it is said, doesn't know.

The central justice of the three depicted is obviously Hughes. The man on his right is thought to be Brandeis and the general guess is that the other figure is that of Justice McReynolds.

And even the most liberal of the lawyers is bewildered about the panel immediately over the door. Beneath the United States eagle is shown a set of scales, presumably supposed to represent Justice. Both pans of the scales are empty, but one end hangs down and the other is high in the air.

D. C. Youth, 19, Badly Hurt by Plane Propeller

Raymond Morders Struck by Blade in Virginia; Condition Critical.

Struck in the back by an airplane propeller as he tried to stop a plane which had started moving after he had cranked it, Raymond Morders, 19-year-old George Washington University student, of 4533 Wisconsin avenue, was in critical condition in a hospital at Fredericksburg, Va., last night.

Morders, according to reports, had landed at Tetotum, in King George County, Va., to visit friends for the day. As he prepared to leave he started the motor and the plane began to move.

As he attempted to halt the craft, the propeller struck him in the back, inflicting a deep wound. The plane then catapulted forward and smashed into a tree.

Morders was taken to Mary Washington Hospital in Fredericksburg. Physicians said last night he was greatly weakened by loss of blood, and added a transfusion might be necessary to save his life.

Morders, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph L. Morders, had been flying for some time. Yesterday morning he borrowed the plane from Beacon Field, near Alexandria, and flew downstate to spend the day.

When he learned Morders might have to undergo a transfusion, Don Compton, himself a pilot and a former motion picture stunt man, volunteered to give his blood to the young flyer. Compton is staying at the G street Y. M. C. A. here.

2 D. C. Dentists Rejoin Faculty At Georgetown

Dr. Joseph L. B. Murray, Dr. Charles L. Smtih Are Appointed.

The appointment of Dr. Joseph L. B. Murray as associate dean of the Georgetown University School of Dentistry, and of Dr. Charles L. Smith as professor of oral surgery and diagnosis, was announced yesterday as the new academic year prepared to open today.

Both Dr. Murray and Dr. Smith are graduates of the school and served on its faculty until some years ago.

Dr. Murray received his early education at the LaSalle Institute, Troy, N. Y., and came to Georgetown University to complete his dentistry course in 1917. After graduation he went into the United States Navy, remaining there four years and now is a member of the Naval Reserve Corps with the rank of lieutenant commander.

After resigning from the service he served at the Veterans' Bureau for a year and then entered private practice. For seven years he was a member of the Georgetown faculty.

Dr. Smith was graduated from Georgetown in 1918 and was stationed at Walter Reed Hospital during the war, where he did dental X-ray work. After his discharge from the Army he engaged in private practice and from 1919 to 1925 served as an instructor in the prosthetics department of Georgetown. In 1923 he became associated with Dr. Sterling V. Mead, as his first assistant and again from 1925 until 1927 he became an instructor at Georgetown. He then engaged in practice for himself.

Roosevelt Writes Letter to Policeman Hurt Guarding Him

Injured Sunday night when thrown from his motorcycle while escorting President Roosevelt from the Navy Yard, Policeman Percy G. Mangum, of the Traffic Division, yesterday proudly displayed a letter from the President.

Mangum suffered minor injuries when his motorcycle skidded while he was trying to prevent a bystander from breaking into the procession.

The letter said:

"My dear Mr. Mangum: I have learned with very great regret that you were injured Sunday evening while safeguarding my return to the White House.

"I cannot resist the impulse to assure you of my sincere appreciation of your effort in my behalf. I do hope that your injuries are not serious and that you will have a speedy recovery. Franklin D. Roosevelt."

Meeting An Emergency.

Before the week is out American authorities in Spain will have completed the extremely difficult and nerve-racking task of evacuating American refugees from that war-torn land. Those who insist on remaining will do so at their own risk.

The occasion should not pass without a tribute to the truly splendid work done for their endangered fellow-citizens by American foreign service officials. The outbreak of the civil war last July found hundreds of our nationals surprised in danger zones, some of them in places extremely difficult of access.

With courage, resourcefulness and skill members of the American Embassy at Madrid, and American consular officials throughout the country, set about rounding up the stranded, providing shelter for them until means of egress from Spain had been made available, and seeing that they got away safely. As a group they have lived up to the highest standards of our foreign service and have performed a task of which all Americans may justly be proud.

Particular praise is due Eric C. Wendelin, third secretary of our embassy at Madrid. With the Ambassador and the next ranking officials away from the capital when trouble began, youthful Mr. Wendelin automatically assumed charge and has for two months skillfully surmounted all the enormously difficult emergency tasks which have fallen to him. Now all but 40 persons claiming American citizenship have been evacuated from the beleaguered capital, or soon will be. These 40, by repeatedly declining to take advantage of the means of rescue placed at their disposal, are no longer in any sense a governmental responsibility.

Shucks.

They are really nothing to look at for all their streamlining. But despite lowly beginnings, and their descent from the downtrodden and spineless Lamellibranchia family, their arrival every fall is hailed with the acclaim which greets transatlantic fliers. Their rearing, fattening, and even their beds are watched over as carefully as those of the Dionnes. Wherever they are found, whole industries spring up and flourish as the green bay tree. Men pursue them, ladies love them, gourmets cry for them. Even burly fishermen are interested in the culture of them. Both palates and prelates are pleased at the mention of their name—which is the oyster.

There is as much dispute about the best way to prepare oysters as there is whether they're "in season" during the r-less months. Shuckers and waterfront wise men claim they're good the year around. City folk, who think the oysters' natural habitat is a bed of cocktail sauce, usually forgo them from May through August. Since news stories are already referring to those months just past as "last summer" it seems silly to quibble. Much more to the point would be six on the half shell.

Why Not?

The death of Jean Charcot, who went down with his ship off Iceland during a storm akin to that now ravaging our coasts, recalls more than the fact that a great Polar explorer has been lost to France and the world. That Charcot began his life as a physician and gave promise of achieving a success comparable to that of his illustrious father, is also interesting.

That father, who died more than 40 years ago, was one of the world's great neurologists. As far back as 1862, when Jean Martin Charcot first became identified with the Salpetriere, he established what is still one of the outstanding nerve clinics of modern times. There he conceived his theories on hysteria and its relation to hypnotism, which formed a starting point for the present practice of psychiatry. Readers of Axel Munthe's memoirs will recall his glowing references to Dr. Charcot. Sigmund Freud may also some day also pay his tribute to the French genius, for it was under his direction and from his premises that the Freudian concept of psychoanalysis first developed.

Jean Baptiste Charcot set out to follow in his father's footsteps. Having completed his interneship, he was attached to the Pasteur Institute and, after no more than six years' practice, was named head of the clinics of the University of Paris, an unprecedented honor for one so young. But suddenly he threw over his medical career. In 1903 he sailed for the Antarctic. That exploration, together with a second shortly following, opened up vast regions in the South hitherto unknown. Charcot Island in the deep South Atlantic today stands as a monument to his efforts. Not content to rest on these laurels, the restless scientist turned to the North and there soon was blocking in long stretches of territory blank on the then existing maps. And in these same parts, on a coast he knew probably better than any other living man, he died.

The scientific brilliancy and maritime setting of his career recalls the somewhat similar record set up by Matthew Fontaine Maury, the famous Confederate naval officer to whom the science of ocean meteorology owes many of its most important gains. And some of the enigmatic flavor in Charcot's life and death clings to the name of the little vessel in which he met the end: "Pourquoi Pas?"

Non-Recognition Continues.

It is unfortunate that Secretary Hull's excellent speech in New York on Tuesday should be interpreted in any quarter as foreshadowing repudiation by this country of its policy of not recognizing territorial conquests resulting from acts of aggression. It is unfortunate both because the speech gave no justification for such a conclusion and because any American leadership in repudiation of the non-recognition principle would undoubtedly be repugnant to the American people. And they, as Mr. Hull freely admits, are the determining factor in the foreign policy of this democracy.

In his New York speech, which was a frank and thoughtful summation of the forces affecting his administration of a most important post, the Secretary of State did refer in passing to the difficulties encountered by the Pact of Paris. "Strong nations," he said, "have chosen to proceed in disregard of that agreement and this basis for international trust has thus been greatly impaired."

That much is unquestioned. But it is very far-fetched to conclude from this assertion of the obvious that the United States is now prepared to give either open or tacit approval to the robberies committed by those who have violated their solemn agreements to renounce war as an instrument of national policy. Certain diplomats in Washington are said to have placed this interpretation on Mr. Hull's remark on the assumption that "when you say in diplomacy that a thing has been greatly impaired, you admit that it is practically gone." Two guesses would probably cover the source of such interpretations.

Had the occasion been appropriate, Secretary Hull would doubtless have pointed out that for the United States to recognize either the Japanese conquest of Manchuria, or the Italian seizure of Ethiopia, would be strange tactics for a government which prides itself on the policy of "the good neighbor." And, even though the speech was intended for domestic consumption, it did make practically this point when the Secretary of State defined the good neighbor policy as taking the form of "just and fair dealings, without encroachment upon the rights of others, or oppression of the weak, or envy of the more fortunate."

Through successive administrations the foreign policy of the United States has on the whole been remarkably consistent. It is therefore a very interesting coincidence that reports of abnegation of the non-recognition policy should coincide with the publication of Secretary Stimson's book on "The Far Eastern Crisis," in which he explains the reasons which led him to apply that policy to the conquest of Manchuria. In this study Mr. Hull's predecessor as Secretary of State also depicts the underlying issues which are forgotten by those "who think that all that is necessary to solve the Manchurian problem is for the United States and Japan to patch up a modus vivendi which will be agreeable to Japan."

The same intent to refrain from encouraging future wars of aggression prevents the United States from officially accepting the Italian conquest of Ethiopia, which is not in the least likely to receive American recognition at any time in the predictable future. It is obvious that the principle first enunciated by Mr. Stimson, and tacitly followed by Mr. Hull, is not at all agreeable to violators of the Kellogg Pact, whether present or presumptive. But the wish is father to the thought if they believe that this principle is being abandoned.

A System For Giving.

Returning prosperity does not mean relinquishment of voluntary social service. Rather it means, as the President pointed out in his address at the annual Mobilization for Human Needs, that a vast amount of important welfare work suspended during the depression must be taken up anew. As the Government gradually withdraws from the field of emergency relief, moreover, larger burdens will inevitably fall upon private agencies.

For this reason the time is especially appropriate for consideration of systematized giving. Both the collection and distribution of charity funds have been vastly improved in recent years through the use of Community Chests. But the securing of the wherewithal for these essential social services is still haphazard and uncertain. If leaders in the Mobilization for Human Needs movement could work out an equitable "yardstick" to measure the relative social obligations of large corporations, another important step toward stabilization of welfare work would be taken.

Of course, contributions must be kept upon a voluntary basis. The efforts of Gerard Swope and other leaders in this year's conference are merely to develop a standard of giving that may be suggested to business firms as a reasonable index of their corporate responsibility. Such organizations could then choose between contributing an appropriate amount and seeing essential welfare activities neglected. Responsibility would thus be localized and Community Chests would attain a much greater degree of stability.

For the present year Community Chests raised an aggregate of $76,157,000. Compared with amounts the Government is spending through its diverse efforts to aid the underprivileged, this is a meager sum. But as funds of this sort from private sources are increased to supplement the governmental social security program there will be less pressure upon the Government to venture into such costly and dubious experiment as, for instance, the National Youth Administration.

Incidentally, the seeming inability of President Roosevelt to keep politics out of his address to this conference on charity will not weaken the movement to return welfare activities to local communities and private agencies.

Divided We Fall.

Before adjourning its annual convention in Detroit the American Federation of Government Employes adopted an extensive program of legislation to be recommended to Congress. In these resolutions are important statements of policy dealing with minimum wages, working hours, extension of the civil service, adjustment of the retirement act and repeal of the so-called married workers' clause. Unfortunately, all of these proposals are relegated to the background by the internal row within the A. F. G. E., which has resulted in the expulsion of more than 600 members.

Attainment of better working conditions for Government workers is a prosaic task in which the public is likely to take only casual interest. But a knock-down, drag-out fight between rival groups in an organization ostensibly devoted to the welfare of all Federal employes is a dramatic affair which commands the front page. No doubt the executive council of the A. F. G. E. will deplore this subordination of constructive action to factional differences. But it has only itself to blame. The majority group controlling the council clearly acted to foster its own immediate interests without regard for the welfare of Government employes as a whole.

The federation emerged from the convention not only with new leadership but with much greater responsibilities upon its directors. Under the revised constitution the executive council could assume dictatorial powers. Several democratic safeguards were swept away. Whatever success the organization achieves in the pursuit of its objectives will be due, in large measure, to the policies of this centralized council. Charles I. Stengle, the new president, will doubtless find that he has taken over the reins in a most difficult period.

The first result of the convention is the tentative organization of the National Association of Federal Employes. Presumably this new agency, composed of the ousted lodges, will compete for members with both the A. F. G. E. and the National Federation of Federal Employes. Assuming that each of these organizations will perform useful work, the tendency toward division into smaller units is most unfortunate. For the influence of Government employes is thus ineffectively diffused.

There is more than a little irony in the decision of the American Federation of Labor to investigate the expulsion of the so-called New Deal lodges from the A. F. G. E. The federation will find itself confronted by a problem very similar in essentials to that which caused its own executive council to suspend the Committee for Industrial Organization. In other words, the A. F. G. E. has merely followed the example of its parent body. If the A. F. of L. sees alarming tendencies in that procedure—which well it may—the investigation should extend beyond the arbitrary conduct of the A. F. G. E. to that of its own hierarchy.

The problem of all labor organizations was reduced to its essence by a sensible statement from the expelled lodges. "We are convinced," it said, "that no organization can survive when a mere difference of opinion is regarded as a sufficient reason to expel a minority group." If controversies such as those involving the "New Deal" lodges and the C. I. O. cannot be settled within the ranks of organized unions, a hopeless weakening of the organized labor movement is to be expected.

Vertical Flight.

From the Manchester (England) Guardian.

The remarkable demonstration of autogiro flying machines which was made on Hounslow Heath at the end of last week reminds us that, after all, speed is not everything. It is an annoying limitation of the ordinary aeroplane that it must have a good run on the earth's surface before it can take the air and that it must alight at a speed which can only be checked by another run. The autogiro made vertical descent possible some years ago. Now a new type of autogiro has been devised which mounts vertically. It was a real thrill to those who watched the demonstration at Hounslow to see these new machines make a sudden leap of 20 feet straight into the air and then settle into horizontal movement. Does this bring us within sight of the time when private citizens will keep flying machines in their back gardens as they now keep motorcars? And is that a consummation to be desired?

So What?

Railroad Revenue.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: There seems to be a general impression that the improvement in earnings of the railroads of the country is due to the effect of the recent order of the Interstate Commerce Commission reducing passenger fares. Comparisons of earnings and reported percentages of gain over previous years are almost always accompanied by some reference to the decision mentioned.

The fallacy of such an assumption is apparent when it is remembered that passenger earnings constitute but a small percentage of railroad earnings as a whole, and that the order of the commission affected only a portion of the passenger rates. In 1934 the passenger earnings of the Class I railroads amounted to about $346,000,000, the freight earnings to $2,629,000,000, the ratio being about 1 to 8. In the Eastern district, principally affected by the order, the available figures for the first eight months of 1936 show about the same ratio of passenger to freight as in the corresponding months of 1935.

In the comparisons of operating results there is also frequent confusion of revenue and income of the railroads. The importance of a distinction may be illustrated by assuming that the revenue of a road (money received over the counter) amounts in a certain year to $100,000,000, operating expenses and taxes to $95,000,000, operating income being therefore the difference, or $5,000,000. In the succeeding year, revenues are increased to $101,000,000, operating expenses and taxes remaining the same as in the first year. It will be seen that while revenues increased only 1 per cent, operating income increased 20 per cent.

An exact determination of the effect of the fare reductions upon the operating income of the railroads is impossible. Even the best approximation would require much study and the use of data not now available. Whether the effect be an increase or decrease, it could be but a very small percentage of operating income.

Use Of The Psalm.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I do not suppose President Roosevelt intended to be sacrilegious in selecting the beautiful Twenty-third Psalm as a text for political propaganda, but it bordered on that. If the New Deal was seeking to install spiritual truth into the Nation to turn us from sin, from greed to the one thing needful, it might be permissible to use this inspired text. However, we all know the New Deal is principally concerned with the "root of all evil."

There has been no effort to teach "man's life consisteth not in abundance of the things which he possesseth." Money, extravagance, waste and oppression have been their teaching. A great deal of "good neighbor" talk mostly resulted in training fruit trees to drop their fruit over the public wall for those who never planted or cultivated the roots.

I am glad the President restrained himself from further simile. The beauty of this chapter is lost apart from the Great Shepherd and His love even unto the "valley of the shadow of death" that many have had to pass through in these hard times.

Floridian Objects.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I was interested in the story that graced the front page of The Post of September 16 dealing with Mr. Harlan Page's tragic encounter with a sting ray in the waters of the Gulf of Mexico off the west coast of Florida. After a graphic account of the accident. Mr. Page adds: "some native pulled the sting ray's barb from my foot . . . other natives put a sort of pump on my foot."

To whom is our hero referring? Floridians And why should these persons who render timely and valuable aid to Mr. Page be classed as something foreign and peculiar? Why should a Floridian be a "native" any more or less, than, for instance, a Washingtonian?

As a 100 per cent Floridian, I resent this strange reference of Mr. Page in his story of his unhappy encounter in the Gulf. Thousands of fine Americans are residents of Florida; and there is nothing queer, quaint, nor unordinary about them that they should be singled out in Mr. Page's mind, as "natives."

Appreciation.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I wish at this time to express my appreciation of the efforts which The Post has made in behalf of Edith Maxwell.

I have watched the developments in this case from the very first with the keenest interest and have, in an inconspicuous way, tried to help.

I trust that the efforts of your paper will not be relaxed until this young woman is set free.

On Leaving The Flag.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Recently a copy of the Officer's Reports, rendered at the Saratoga Springs Convention of the Auxiliary, the United Spanish War Veterans, was issued. On page 44 of the pamphlet there appears a compilation of alleged facts with reference to the Spanish-American War, compiled by Hugh L. Stephenson, Department Commander of Iowa, 1932-1933.

Among other curious and interesting attributes and virtues of that "noble war," Mr. Stephenson says: "It was the first campaign fought on foreign soil. We did not bring the flag home—we left it where we put it and it is there yet." Any person familiar with the "pension grabs" of the Spanish-American War Veterans as an organization will hardly doubt the statement of the patriotic Mr. Stephenson. Had they brought the flag back they could hardly have been guilty of their continued raids on the Treasury. The sight of the flag might have had some effect on their itching palms. With the flag, however, ". . . left . . . there . . ." the organized veterans have not been troubled with upholding the flag and so with both hands free they have been able to "dig deeper."

The Power Conference.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Thank you very warmly on behalf of the executive committee of the World Power Conference for the splendid support we have had from your paper during recent weeks in the effort to give to the reports of the technical discussions educational value, freedom from rancor and reasonable objectivity.

The World Power Conference has it in its power, I believe, to render very great service in pointing up the increasingly numerous social and economic questions involved in the development and utilization of power. In fact, I know of no other agency having any comparable position.

So that it has been a real satisfaction to have conducted six days of discussions without important infractions of the rules that govern the meetings of technical and scientific societies. But it is even more important in my opinion to have had these matters reported in the newspapers in such an intelligent fashion. MORRIS L. COOKE,

Corn And Cotton.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Mr. J. E. Herbert makes a great to do over 15 cent cotton and $1 corn. Why is the price raised on articles almost exclusively used by the medium and poor folks of our land? Mr. Herbert perhaps can explain how the price was raised or admit that future taxes of unborn people are to carry the burden that has made "men dependents" with an attitude that the "world owes me a living" instead of "the man owes the world a man."

Prices legitimately are derived from supply and demand, and we have imported an equivalent of foodstuff for home consumption that could have been raised on the "idle acres" paid for out of future taxes. True, there is more money, but is that any wonder with billions of money turned loose without judgment as to values? Hidden taxes and taught financing must be responsible. I do not know.

Filling The Bag.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: A few months ago Prof. Jim Farley, with his pungent political directness, said: "It's in the bag." The ex-master of the mails should have known whereof he narrated, for it is in the Postoffice Department that the bags are made.

The Church Under Der Fuehrer.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Several days ago I read in your paper an article which quoted Dr. T. D. Buckman as saying that he thanked God for a man like Adolf Hitler to oppose the antichrist of Communism and mentioning that Fascism under a God-guided Hitler might be the answer to present-day problems. I have a great respect for Dr. F. D. Buckman and it was with surprise that I read this statement. Far be it from me to discourage anyone's gratitude to God, but I do think Dr. F. D. Buckman is blessing Him for a peculiar reason this time.

I can imagine a saint regarding Hitler as a God-given scourge to his patience, but I cannot understand how any Christian can hail him as a champion. I don't dispute the possibilities of a God-guided Hitler though I would first like to see the miracle come to pass. Nor do I understand why a God-guided democracy could not fill the bill.

Adolf Hitler does not oppose Communism because of its cruelties to the Christian religion. In fact, he even charges his own church with being in league with the Communists. His attack on Communism and his attacks on the Jews are only preliminary to an attack on Russia for certain material advantages.

We hear of Hitler that he lets his own name be saluted before God's in the schools, that old Christian hymns have been altered to substitute Hitler's name for Christ's. We know how pagan gods have been introduced again into Germany, how all power has been taken from the churches, even the right to educate their children. We know how Christians and Jews are suffering side by side, how no slander is too mean, no cartoon too coarse to be used against the Catholic Church. It is true priests are not massacred, blood is not spilt—yet. Hitler's method is more insidious. He merely takes away the good name of those he wishes to harm.

Let us not rejoice too soon that Communism has found so deadly an enemy. When two dogs bite each other, it is often the more poisonous one that survives! H. M.

The Post Impressionist

"Anything For Quiet."

Post Office, Friday.

"IF you may properly apply the term 'Washington residents' to all of the people who spend most of their time in the Capital," said the hotel manager, "then, in proportion to the total number of its residents, Washington has a higher percentage of residents living in hotels than any other city of the United States."

The Post-Impressionist inquired: "Because most of them are here at the will of the shifting winds of Government?"

"Largely, after all, Washington is a city where you'll meet a man at lunch today, date him for dinner tomorrow—and tomorrow morning hear that he's en route for Butte, Mont., or Managua, Nicaragua.

"Your average political resident of Washington wants to feel settled and yet, for the most part, just can't make all the detailed arrangements necessary to what he calls 'settling.' He has to deputize somebody. But his income won't justify him in hiring a housekeeper, who'll in turn engage a separate staff.

"So he goes to live at a hotel, where all the details are arranged for everybody.

"Oh," said the manager, "the reasons are legion, but that's a big one. Unless he's a rich man, or has rich friends who'll back him for a top-line place in politics, the political resident of Washington often lives in a hotel in order to avoid social embarrassments; it gives him a good address, while reducing his entertainment obligations."

* * *

"And then," your columnist suggested, "a great many of such people probably like to live in a hotel because they like crowds."

"Yes," the manager admitted, "but there are a lot who go to a hotel because they need quiet—although, on the whole, I don't like guests of that sort.

"There's one," said the manager, "who's a Senator. He overworks—has to have rest, but is afraid that, if it's known he's resting, people will gossip that he's playing out.

"So, about twice each session, he'll tell his friends that he's going to New York on business. He'll slip away from his big uptown apartment, come into my hotel by the side door, without registering, and go to bed and stay there for the week-end.

"Then there's a highly cultured Washington woman who is a famous hostess. From early each October till the middle of the following June, she works as hard as any steamship-stoker works at coal-shoveling—except for one full week after the Christmas holidays.

"That week she spends abed in the quietest room of my hotel, reading detective-stories.

"But the strangest thing that ever happened here in connection with a rest-cure guest," said the manager, happened just a week ago.

"Late in August, a pretty well-known Government official asked me if I could give his dear old mother the kind of quarters she needed. She had to have something bright, but, above all, she had to have absolute quiet. She was very old and very fragile; the slightest shock might be the end of her. So she and her trained-nurse must be given a suite away from all noise and excitement.

"Well, I did my best. I assigned them a back-corner suite on an upper floor. The old lady was wheeled in—a little, white old lady whose hands, folded in her lap, shook like leaves in the wind. I was afraid even the trip up in the elevator would be too much for her; but, though of course she never left her rooms, she was still alive last week—if you can call that sort of de luxe prison-life living.

"Oddly enough, there was soon another sick guest in the hotel; man in a 'single' just across the hall from the old lady. When he died the other day, I could only hope his aged neighbor hadn't got wind of it . . .

"After everything was in order, and it was the middle of the night, I met the undertaker's men at the back and had them take the coffin up in the freight-elevator, as we always do in such cases. Some business held me for a few minutes, but then I hopped after them.

"You can imagine how I felt when I saw that they'd mistaken the room-number—were carrying the coffin into the old lady's suite."

"And the shock killed her?" asked your columnist.

"There," replied the manager, "is the queerest thing about the whole matter. By the time I got to her she was sitting up in bed, asking her visitors for all the details. She turned on me, and she said:

"Haven't you any consideration for a guest who is living the way I am? I'd never have heard this news if these people hadn't happened in here. Why don't you ever tell me anything? Tomorrow I'm going to a hotel where people will keep me abreast of the news!"

American Conventions.

The American Legion has decided to abstain from furniture-throwing and trapeze work on the high chandeliers in the 18th annual convention in Cleveland next week. This change of custom will evoke a resolution of relief from the hotel keepers, and it should have a sedative effect on the conduct of all conventioneers. The American Legion's national conventions set the pace for other meetings of fraternal and business organizations, and its magnificent challenges to prohibition in Boston and Detroit were heartening incidents in the long and painful protest against the despised amendment.

The Legion as such refrained from political action against the scourge, but its actions spoke louder than formal resolutions could have, and, reasoning that the heroes of the World War could do no wrong, conventioneers at other jamborees undertook to do likewise.

The convention is an American custom. Hundreds of thousands of Americans spend millions of dollars every year traveling up and down the country to meet and, ostensibly, to exchange ideas and promote their interests. But during prohibition many of these meetings became straight "souse" parties which produced no intelligible results but served to keep alive the rebellion. The hotel industry suffered heavily in ruined carpets, burnt bedding, shattered dishware and glasses, chairs torn limb from limb and tossed out the windows and plumbing clogged with straw and burlap wrappers from the bootleggers' packages.

Ordeal of Making Horribly Merry.

In the early years of the great American drought New York hosts who entertained the out-of-town trade at the annual convention of the Newspaper Publishers' Association looked forward to convention week with dread. They put in large stocks of bathtub Scotch and gin, collecting it for weeks, a bottle or a case at a time, according to the state of the market, and storing it in the office safe while they went into training against the ordeal of making horribly merry far into the night for a whole long, terrible week.

When it was over the visiting firemen went home wondering vaguely where they had been and whether they had married anybody by chance, and the New York people went to bed for a week to recuperate.

The newspaper trade, for some curious reason, gave up the protest long before repeal, but these were mostly boys of an older group whose arteries already were crackling like brambles in a brush fire. And, anyway, they were in a position to know that, even though repeal might never come in their time, there would always be plenty of provisions.

No American city saw a greater variety of funny hats and costumes and delirious antics than Atlantic City, where the conventions followed one another in solid procession from spring to late autumn. Atlantic City was lawless, and proud of it, with an underworld of its own reinforced by the underworld of Philadelphia, and anything short of first-degree murder was regarded as mere relaxation and the enjoyment of Atlantic City's cordial hospitality.

• • • •

Damage Spread Over Hotel Bills.

The hotel people there did consider the possibility of using rubber furniture and waxed paper glasses to cut down the toll of destruction, but it never was really necessary, for the damage was spread over the bills, either in painful lumps or in invisible charges which the celebrators did not feel.

A Los Angeles hotel man complained after one harmless jollification of citizens bent on recapturing their youth that some of his guests had attempted to dismember a piano and heave it into the street.

In Lousville at Derby time, which is not a convention in the formal sense but used to be an annual reunion of the underworld of the Mississippi and Ohio valleys, a group of light-hearted vintners from Cicero, Ill., threw a large radio out a window late at night, achieving the loudest crash of the week.

• • • •

Drives Midget Auto Around Lobby.

This feat, however, could not seriously challenge the star performance of the legionnaires in their Boston convention, which probably was the high point of their career. In the Boston convention one of the legionnaires drove a midget automobile into the lobby of a big hotel, marked out a speedway for himself and tore around the room, not only scattering human life before him but loading the atmosphere with exhaust fumes. Those were the good old days, no doubt of that.

The Germans have caught the convention spirit lately, but the Germans of the present breed are not much interested in drinking and get their bang out of heiling Hitler and singing warlike songs. That will seem a strange custom to Americans, who sing, to be sure, particularly the endless doggerel about the grasshoppers and Mademoiselle from Armentieres but cannot get hot on mere idolatry.

The Legion used to be rather sensitive about the notoriety which followed its foolishness at the annual meetings, but now that the boys are older and less able to go without food and sleep they may take some pride in the fact that they were important, if not the foremost, leaders in the long campaign to make men free.

A Snook

By WILLIAM LYON PHELPS.

I never knew until last week that the international derisive gesture of contempt made by putting the thumb to the nose and stretching out the fingers was called a "snook." It appears, however, in both American and British dictionaries, though its etymological origin is unknown.

This summer the London newspapers have been enjoying a series of articles and letters from correspondents on this interesting matter. A correspondent started the general hunt for the origin of the word and custom by writing a letter to the Times and signing it "A Student of Etiquette."

Many have said that it probably had its origin along the shores of the Mediterranean, where a sweeping gesture of the arm in Egypt was used to avoid the evil eye.

The gesture is undoubtedly several centuries old. One man found a comic drawing which pretended to have been taken from an ancient vase, called "Fame Eluding Her Follower." A young man is eagerly pursuing a female form, but the latter has just turned and is thumbing her nose at him. This is an experience often felt by all ambitious persons, whatever picture might be made to represent it.

• • • •

One man quoted from Thomas Ingoldsby, who assumed that the gesture was common 400 years ago, for in the days of Henry VIII:

The Sacristan, he says no word that indicates a doubt,
But he puts his thumb unto his nose, and he spreads his fingers out!

The tandem joke is, of course, well known, where the bishop rebuked the parson for driving tandem, and the unfortunate parson replied that if you drove a span it made no difference in what way you arranged them. This left him wide open for the bishop.

One lady wrote that one day, being in an omnibus near Charing Cross, a gentleman opposite dropped a penny. She picked it up and handed it to him. In a few minutes he dropped it again; she picked it up. On the third occasion she placed it in his hand and told him he must be careful of his money. Instantly he thumbed his nose at her, adding his other hand to the one already outstretched, and looking earnestly, yet silently, at her. The conductor led him off the bus and gave him to a policeman.

They then thought he was drunk, but on later reflection she thinks that his "cocking the snook" was probably "the man's idea of a polite acknowledgment of a small act of attention."

• • • •

English ladies have delightful experiences on buses. I remember reading an article by one humorous lady. She got into a bus and an old man opposite her kept taking apples out of a bag, and while shaking an apple vigorously he would place it close to his ear, as one does to hear if a watch is ticking. Finally she could not stand it any longer. "Sir, may I ask why you do that?" The man replied, "Well, you know, madam, there is a certain kind of apple that when you shake it you can hear the seeds." She inquired, "And is this one that kind of an apple?" He replied "No, madam." "Well, then, why——" But she saw it was no use.

The French View

Despite Calls For Intervention In Spanish Affairs, Blum Keeps Sense Of Proportion Clear, Auguring Hopefully For Peace.

By Andre Vulliet.
Special Correspondent of The Post.

Paris.

LED BY certain political leaders who are banking on the similarity between the names of the French government of "Popular Front" and the Spanish "Frente Popular," French workers are gradually becoming convinced that their own future happiness is linked to the triumph of "democracy" in Spain. Therefore, they are easily made to parade and demonstrate, shouting "Guns for Spain! Planes for Spain!" In their opinion, this does not contradict the motto for which they voted a few months ago, in the French general elections: "Peace, bread and liberty." Whether peace, bread and liberty would not be better secured by keeping aloof is another question.

It is interesting to notice how the French who, in the ordinary course of life, covet nobody's territory and fear foreign entanglements, can be worked up to the point of interfering with other people's business when it comes to ideologies, with the result that they sometimes can be caught in the fighting.

Napoleon, who certainly knew them well, used to say of the French that you could make them march anywhere and fight through vanity. It appears there is no better incentive to vanity than ideologies. In fact, except when it comes to defending their own soil, it seems that the best way of making the French people go to war is to find an ideologic slogan and tell them they are the "soldiers of liberty." They really fought as such during the early wars of the French Revolution. They did it again in 1859 when they helped Italy win her war of independence. They pretty nearly did it in 1848 for Germany's liberty.

Michelet, the great French historian of last century, depicted a parade held in Paris in March 1848 in which the French flag was intermingled with "the great German flag, so noble, the beloved flag of Luther, Kant and Fichte, Schiller, Beethoven, alongside with the charming tri-colored Italian flag." "What emotion!" the writer pursued, "with what fervor did we wish the unity of those two peoples! May the Lord give us a great and powerful Germany, a great and powerful Italy. The European council will be incomplete, unharmonious, subjected to the cruel fancies and the sacrilegious wars of the kings, as long as those two genial peoples are not admitted and given a chance to sit at the council, thus adding a new element of wisdom and peace to the fraternal equilibrium of the world."

Twenty-two years later, in 1870, the German unity was well nigh completed by Bismarck and the French were beaten to the bone by the Germans during the Franco-Prussian War.

French Keep Calm, Eying Duce And Hitler.

AS REGARDS the Spanish situation, it must be pointed out that the French have not as yet worked themselves up to fighting temperature. But what disturbs them particularly is to find out to what extent Signor Mussolini and Herr Hitler are working hand in glove in Spain.

As a matter of fact, one wonders how Italy could willingly accept to see Germany play a prominent part in Spain. This is tantamount to encouraging a German expansion in the Mediterranean, which is already hardly big enough for the ambitions, naval needs and prestige of Italy, France and Great Britain.

On the other hand, the French are also wondering how long Italy and Germany will keep on friendly terms in central Europe. Only a few weeks ago Il Duce appeared to bow before the German dictator, when the latter concluded an Austro-German accord by which, in the long run, he will virtually have Austria in the palm of his hand—a move which Mussolini has strongly opposed for years.

Meanwhile, Dr. Hjalmar Schacht, head of the Reichsbank and minister of German economy, visited Yugoslavia; Hungarian Regent Horthy went hunting in Bavaria, where he saw Chancellor Hitler; Czechosolvakian President Eduard Benes hinted to the advisability of a rapprochement between his country and Germany; perennial Rumanian Foreign Minister Titulesco, the long-lived friend of the League of Nations, has been ousted from Rumanian politics which observers think is likely to take a pro-German turn.

It thus appears that when both Germany and Italy try to extend their influence in central and southeastern Europe and make friends at the expense of other countries, Germany has a much stronger appeal, mostly on economical grounds, and is likely to steal the show from Italy.

No War In Europe Since Russ-Pole Clash.

OF COURSE, there remains a fair chance that all these evolutions and counter-evolutions may proceed peacefully, with a good war scare now and then but no more international fighting in Europe than we had during the past 15 years. After all, there has been no war in Europe since the Polish-Russian clashes in 1920, strange as it may seem to those who see this continent as continually and hopelessly engaged in military enterprises.

But Europe has had more than enough war scares. Considering the last three years only, many predicted, the outbreak of war after Chancelor Dollfuss of Austria was assassinated in July, 1934; after King Alexander of Yugoslavia had been murdered in October, 1934. The next warnings went up before the Saar plebiscite. Then, after Germany unexpectedly sprang up with a powerful new army in the spring of 1935, there was another flurry. Nerves tensed again when Italy and Great Britain looked daggers at each other during the Italo-Abyssinian conflict and when Germany remilitarized the Rhineland a few months ago.

Indeed, never has this dark modern world been confronted with so many causes for war, so many newborn fanaticisms. Yet, war has not broken out in the past few years, war is not breaking out today and there is a good chance that it will not break out in the near future.

A greater sense of values seems gradually to be materializing. The prospect of renewed frenzy in the German armament race gave rise to no violent indignation among the peoples concerned—either in Great Britain, France, Belgium or Czechoslovakia. The French made no speeches and the French government made no reference to the Versailles treaty, whose military clauses have long been abolished anyway. French Premier Leon Blum conferred with Gen. Gamelin, chief of the French general staff, and that was all.

Peace Conversations May Still Be Continued.

THIS DOES NOT preclude the opportunity of conversations and talks among nations. On the contary, Premier Leon Blum has stated this plainly, on the occasion of Dr. Schacht's recent visit to Paris. Answering a letter written to him by the secretary general of the French Communist Party to the effect that such a visit was unwelcome, Mr. Blum did not mince his words: "At no time," he wrote, "will the French government give up the idea of peace; at no time—even on the morrow of the day when Germany doubled the duration of her military conscription—will the French government refuse to participate in conversations which may help to facilitate a general settlement of European problems, either financial and economic or political."

In this, it appears that Mr. Blum was followed and will continue to be followed by the great majority of French public opinion.

Indeed, the main problem of Europe today is, always has been and will be for a long time, that of the organization of peace and the halting of the armament race. It is the only real problem. It rests in central Europe, and principally between France and Germany.

Britain Sends Note To Locarno Powers

London, Sept. 17 (AP).—Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden, his chickenpox cured, tonight worked to keep the complexion of Europe unmarred.

A note to Locarno power representatives in London was drafted preliminary to a five-point meeting. The note, informed sources said, contained definitioins of what must be done before Britain, France, Belgium, Germany and Italy could meet, and asked a definite date for the conference.

Germany and Italy had asked that "adequate" diplomatic preparations be made before the formal session's date was set—probably next month.

The Maine Vote

An Editorial Review

Pro And Con.

The reaction of Republicans in New England to the results of the election in Maine is probably fairly summarized by the following remarks of the Boston Transcript:

The State of Maine has given a complete answer to the forces which sought to challenge the common sense and good judgment of its people. Yet it is more than a party victory. It is a triumph for sound government and economical administration and a rebuke to those who thought the voters could be persuaded to sell their birthright for a mess of New Deal pottage. It is a call to Americans everywhere to stand up and be counted.

Another expression of New England's feelings is found in the editorial comment of the Hartford (Conn.) Courant, which argued:

The indisputable point about the election in Maine is that it marks a reversal of the trend that set in four years ago. . . . At the same time, Republicans who do not want to indulge in wishful thinking will not be deceived by the superficialities of the returns from Maine. . . . Certainly the returns in Maine make plain that no overwhelming victory for either party is to be expected six weeks hence. A fair interpretation would be that New England and the East generally are safe for Landon, as it was for Wilson in 1916, but that the attitude of the Middle West is by no means certain.

• • • •

Eagle Reflects New York Views.

As might have been expected, the interpretations being placed on the results in the Maine election by extremely partisan sources are greatly exaggerated. On the one hand, the Sun, supporting Landon, declared that "Maine's election returns are the handwriting on the wall for Farley and Company." On the other hand, the New York Post, supporting Roosevelt, holds that "if Republican Maine goes Republican by so narrow a margin, the prospects for a Democratic landslide in the rest of the country are strong, indeed." Neither view seems to us to be justified by the returns studied in the light of past experience. . . . It has been the size of the pluralities rather than the result that has been more or less of a barometer, the narrowest margin by which the Republicans have carried the Governorship and yet gone on to win the national election having been about 36,000 in 1924. This would indicate that the triumph of Lewis O. Barrows, Republican candidate for Governor, by about 40,000, is scarcely as decisive a swing as the Republicans would have us believe. . . . The National Republican organization, however, has every right to be encouraged by the Maine results. They show conclusively that great numbers of Republicans who voted Democratic four years ago and two years ago have returned to their original party fold.

• • • •

Constitution Sees Empty Victory.

Representative of the Southern reception to the Maine news, the Atlanta Constitution declared:

The result of the election in Maine, in so far as its bearing on the national campaign is concerned, is, at best, an empty victory for the Republicans. As a rock-ribbed Republican State that has gone Democratic only once in 60 years, having given its electoral vote to Wilson in 1912, it is the size of the Republican majority and not the fact that the Republicans win that must be used as the yardstick to measure the national significance of the outcome of the election.

Another Democratic view, this time from the Midwest, is supplied by the St. Louis Star-Times which said:

The most definite effect is to discredit the Literary Digest poll, which indicated that the Republicans would poll 69 per cent of the vote. . . . Balancing the exceptional strength of Gov. Brann, the Democratic senatorial candidate, against the weakness of the Democratic Congressional ticket, it seems likely that the vote on Governor gives the fairest appraisal of the probable strength of President Roosevelt. If that is true, Maine is 56.6 per cent Republican, whereas the Literary Digest poll shows it 69 per cent. . . . Since the Republicans actually were elected, there will be a great cry of "As Maine goes," etc., but as Maine was one of only six States carried by Hoover in 1932, there is cold statistical comfort for Gov. Landon in the result. result.

The Once Over

By H. I. PHILLIPS.

Interview With Harry Richman.

Q. Mr. Richman, what was your purpose in flying across the Atlantic and back?

A. I thought it about time somebody in the show business did something that hadn't been done before.

Q. But the Atlantic had been flown before.

A. (in amazement) Why wasn't I notified?

• • • •

Q. Do you consider that your flight achieved any worth-while results?

A. Yes, it proved that an airplane is better publicity for a man in the theatrical business than a diary.

Q. But what was its importance scientifically?

A. It demonstrated that it is possible for a prominent actor to pass two weeks without being asked to appear at a benefit.

Q. Is that a science?

A. Ask any actor.

• • • •

Q. It was very bad luck that you were forced down in Ireland on the way over.

A. Not so bad; it might have been Germany!

Q. How do you explain landing in such a bad spot in Newfoundland on the way back?

A. After 18 or 20 hours over the Atlantic nothing that looks like land seems like a bad spot.

Q. Were you hurt?

A. No, but it was certainly a punk place to take a bow.

• • • •

Q. What was your first thought when you plopped down in that desolate waste?

A. I looked around and my first impression was that it must be a Shubert performance; everybody had been barred.

Q. What was the first thing you did?

A. I started to sing "King for a Day," but when there was no spotlight I knew something was wrong.

Q. What did you do next?

A. I reached for a telephone to complain to my agent.

Q. Did you get it?

A. No, and I threw out both shoulders. How was I to know the nearest telephone was so far away it would take a reach of 150 miles?

• • • •

Q. What really forced you to land so far short of your goals?

A. My mistake was in taking Merrill instead of a Presidential candidate. Then I wouldn't have run out of gas.

Q. Why did you call the plane the Lady Peace?

A. The way things are in Europe I didn't want anybody mistaking it for a war bomber.

Q. But why the "lady?"

A. I thought there was less chance that a feminine plane would come down in such a lonely section.

Q. How do you explain it?

A. I guess she was no lady.

• • • •

Q. One more question, Mr. Richman. What about those 40,000 ping-pong balls? Were they any help?

A. (indignantly) Help? Say, I just found out about 'em.

Q. What?

A. Some jealous rival substituted billiard balls. That's Broadway!

"The Big Fellow"

Tom Pendergast, Though Ill, Still Snapping Whip In Missouri And National Democratic Circles With "Young Jim" Assisting.

By Felix Bruner,
A Staff Correspondent.

Kansas City.

"THE BIG FELLOW" lies desperately ill in a hospital here, but so well has he builded his political machine that it rolls on unretarded, the greatest single influence in a Missouri election.

"The Big Fellow" is Thomas J. Pendergast, once known as the Democratic boss of Kansas City, then the Democratic boss of Missouri, and now a powerful figure in national politics. Pendergast became ill at the Philadelphia convention. He was taken to New York, where it was found that he was suffering from a serious stomach ailment. Recently he was brought back to Kansas City, some say to die—but he still holds in his once chubby hand the political figure of this State, and perhaps, if the vote is sufficiently close, of the Nation.

Pendergast is the last of the political bosses. The Vare machine in Philadelphia has passed on. The Brennan machine in Illinois is gone. The Taggart machine in Indiana has been supplanted by the McNutt machine, but McNutt, suave, handsome college professor, has little in common with the old-time political dictators. Pendergast is an old-time political boss.

In Kansas City, the city and county administrations are Democratic. The party—which is another word for Pendergast—carried Jefferson County by more votes in 1934 than it did in the 1932 landslide. The State administration in Missouri is Democratic. For the first time in 23 years, St. Louis at the other end of the State, has a Democratic municipal administration. Missouri has 12 Democratic members of Congress and one Republican member—Dewey Short, Ozark Mountain evangelist. It has two Democratic United States Senators.

In St. Louis there is a major vote fraud scandal. Even the Democratic office holders have been forced to recognize it. In Kansas City there are rumors of vote frauds, but no one has done anything about them. In the rural districts there has been much suffering from the drought. It would seem that these things might combine to weaken the Democratic organization. But well-informed persons say that they have not worked that way. The Government has poured millions of dollars into Missouri. These millions have trickled down through the fingers of Tom Pendergast and his henchmen.

Truman Owed Senate Seat To Pendergast.

MISSOURI will not elect a Senator this year. Two years ago Harry S. Truman was elected to the Senate. He had been a county judge in Kansas City, a part of the Pendergast machine. He was little known in the State as a whole, but Tom Pendergast wanted him in the Senate. He is there.

There have been times, however, when the "Big Fellow" has received a good trimming, but such defeats have not retarded him long. One of the times was in 1932, when Bennett Champ Clark, capable son of the late Speaker Champ Clark, defeated the Pendergast candidate, Charles M. Howe, Kansas City lawyer, by 100,000 votes in the primary. But Pendergast came back. Clark opposed Truman in 1932, but the "Big Fellow's" candidate won, and so decisive was the defeat that Clark made his peace. It is reported here that he and Pendergast no longer misunderstand each other.

Clark and Pendergast understand each other so well that they got together on the appointment of a WPA administrator, Matthew C. Murray. The administrator was one of Pendergast's men. Before he was appointed to represent Harry L. Hopkins in this State, he was Pendergast's director of public works in Kansas City.

"The Big Fellow" understands the Works Progressive Administration's aims. Boondoggling meets with his hearty approval, especially the kind that involves construction. Pendergast is in the construction business. He is head of the Ready-Mixed Concrete Co., and of a number of subsidiary concerns engaged in building, road paving and the like. His companies never lack business.

Tom Succeeded Jim And Nephew Will Be Next.

"THE BIG FELLOW" is part of a dynasty. He is not the original builder of the Pendergast machine, but he added so many modern improvements that he brought it from the status of a small, locally operated mechanism to a powerful force. The founder of the machine was Jim Pendergast, an older brother. When he passed on, Tom Pendergast inherited the crown.

Now there is another Jim Pendergast, who is heir apparent to the throne. He is the 41-year-old nephew of "the Big Fellow." For years Tom Pendergast has been training "Young Jim," as he is generally known here, to be his successor.

Tom Pendergast, before serious illness laid him low, looked like the cartoonist's conception of a political boss. He weighed all of 240 pounds. He had massive shoulders, a big head, a thick, short neck. He could take care of himself in any company. He once turned down a contract to play professional baseball. Those who have seen him recently, however, say the 64-year-old boss has lost much of his weight through illness. When he was brought from New York to Kansas City several days ago the car on which he lay traveled behind a locomotive running as a second section of a regular train. It was as well guarded from the curious as a Presidential special. Tom Pendergast, once a waterfront boy, now rates that kind of attention. But they say that the "Big Fellow" is not particularly wealthy. He has given away many thousands, a dollar or ten dollars at a time, to loyal friends and party workers.

Pendergast, before he became seriously ill, was described as "a political boss in the morning, a business man in the afternoon, and a family man at all times." He is devoted to his wife and three children. The "Big Fellow" has an army of devoted followers, but few of them know him intimately. He shuns the spotlight and rarely attends public gatherings.

Organization Offices In Jeffersonian Club.

The boss regularly held forth on the second floor of a two-story building on Kansas City's Main street. The building is the home of the Jefferson Democratic Club. At the top of a flight of narrow stairs is a long hall, resembling a lodge room. In the hall are chairs where visitors wait. On the walls are pictures of Franklin D. Roosevelt, Woodrow Wilson, James A. Reed, and the "Big Fellow" himself.

"Young Jim" is in charge now, and things go on much the same. A man who was a frequent visitor to the place before Tom Pendergast became ill, described the scene. He said that every two or three minutes a door at the side of the hall would open and a voice would roar, "Who's next?" The visitor who was next would confront the big, ruddy-faced, gray-eyed man.

"What do you want?" was the invariable opening.

The visitor would state his business briefly. Whether it was a job or some other political favor, the answer was always immediately forthcoming. It was a positive "yes" or "no"—and the answer always stuck. The "Big Fellow" demanded only loyalty. He gave loyalty in return.

Pendergast, before his illness, arose every morning at 5 o'clock. An hour later he was at his office. He worked at politics until noon. He ate his lunch in his office. He attended to his private business in the afternoon. Evenings were devoted to his family.

Pendergast's ability to deliver made him a power. He has put judges on the bench. He has placed jobholders everywhere. In almost every block of Kansas City is someone who is looking after the interests of the machine. In 1920, when Republicans took temporary control, scores of Pendergast key men were placed temporarily in private jobs until the storm blew over. The "Big Fellow" ignores all charges of irregularity. He defends his private business activities, nearly all of which have to do with public construction, with the answer that he has as much right to be in business as has anyone else. Besides his family, his hobby is horse races. He never misses a Kentucky Derby and frequently attends Eastern race meets.

Missouri's Democratic candidate for Governor this year is Lloyd C. Stark, head of a big nursery business at the town of Louisiana. The Republican candidate is Jesse W. Barrett, of St. Louis, a former State attorney general. Both are making active campaigns. The Pendergast machine is most interested, however, in the Presidential race. The fact that Alf M. Landon is a close neighbor in Kansas may have some effect on the vote. So may the St. Louis vote frauds. But Republicans are claiming at the moment only an outside chance of victory.

Institute Poll Reveals Cities For Roosevelt

President's Chicago Edge Viewed as Slight; Towns to Landon.

By George Gallup.
American Institute of Public Opinion.

New York, Sept. 17.—The November election will show a novel tug-of-war between the great cities and the small towns this year, if present trends in public opinion continue during the next six weeks.

A majority of voters in each of the ten largest cities favor the re-election of President Roosevelt, while the average of votes from small towns and rural homesteads favors the election of Gov. Landon.

If the cities out-pull the small towns, Roosevelt's victory is indicated; if the small towns tug the harder, Landon should be elected.

This situation is indicated in the latest Nation-wide poll of the American Institute of Public Opinion, its fifth complete national survey since the nomination of Landon and its thirty-fourth national poll on the presidency since Roosevelt's inauguration. State-by-State figures in this poll will be reported Sunday in The Washington Post.

New York City, the largest city in the country, leads all other major cities in Roosevelt support with a vote of 67 per cent to 33 per cent. Other cities which give the President nearly a two-to-one lead are Pittsburgh and Baltimore.

Chicago, where Roosevelt now leads by a margin of 51 per cent to 49 per cent is more nearly within Landon's reach than any of the other large cities.

Since the institute poll reported September 6 shifts have occurred in several cities. Roosevelt has lost from one to two points in New York City, Philadelphia, Los Angeles, Cleveland and Boston. He has gained in Detroit, St. Louis, Baltimore and Pittsburgh, and there has been no change in his standing in one, Chicago. The following table compares the big city vote today with the vote reported September 6:

| | % of Major Party Vote For Roosevelt | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| | Sept. 6 | Today | Change |
| N. Y. C. | 68% | 67% | — |
| Chicago | 51 | 51 | — |
| Phila. | 58 | 56 | — |
| Detroit | 55 | 56 | + |
| L. A. | 63 | 61 | — |
| Clev. | 67 | 65 | — |
| St. L. | 56 | 58 | + |
| Balt. | 61 | 62 | + |
| Boston | 59 | 58 | — |
| Pgh. | 64 | 65 | +1 |

In contrast with Roosevelt's popularity in the cities is sentiment from voters in small towns. These votes are 51.6 per cent for Landon and 48.4 per cent for Roosevelt in the poll to be reported Sunday.

New York State Split.

New York State is a familiar example of how the small towns may be ranged against the big cities in political sentiment. Upstate New York goes regularly Republican; New York City goes regularly Democratic. In 1932 the big city outpulled the rest of the State, and New York's 47 electoral votes went for Roosevelt. In the poll reported September 6 the small towns of New York were out-pulling the Democratic metropolis and New York's electoral votes were listed for Landon. Sunday's report will bring the New York State situation up to date.

Other cities, like Philadelphia, however, have traditionally voted the same ticket as the rest of the State. If the ten largest cities all cast majorities for Roosevelt this November, it will be a situation not matched in modern times.

Examination of the vote for all parties reveals that Lemke is stronger in Boston than in any other great city. His share of the total vote there is 10 per cent. In Cleveland the Lemke vote is somewhat more than 9 per cent, in St. Louis 6 per cent.

| | % of All-Party Vote For Lemke |
|---|---|
| New York City | 3.3% |
| Chicago | 3.6 |
| Philadelphia | 3.6 |
| Detroit | 5.9 |
| Los Angeles | 4.9 |
| Baltimore | 2.1 |
| Pittsburgh | 3.6 |

Former Queen Of Spain Lands To See Sick Son

Victoria Arrives at New York to Confront Annulment Battle.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Sept. 17.—Victoria of Spain, tragic heiress to the throne of Isabella, came to the new world today on a mother's mission and found herself embroiled at once in an American annulment fight.

The former Spanish Queen ostensibly came here to visit her son, the Count of Covadonga, who is ill.

The count's friends insisted, however, that she was here to take him to England and away from the legal difficulties he has encountered since his enthusiastic adoption of America as "his new home" six months ago.

Races to Bedside.

The blonde granddaughter of England's famous Victoria, a stoutish woman in a gray sports suit and black hat, raced to the bedside of the count by yacht and private car from the liner Conte di Savoia.

It was her first chance to talk with him of his shattered romance with the Cuban beauty, Edelmira Sampedro de Boubon.

George Lassell, the count's attorney in his marriage annulment, suit, said he was conferring with the former queen later today.

Justin Franco, Edelmira's attorney, issued a warning that if Victoria tried to take her son before he had paid alimony, he "would find some legal way to stop her."

Fails to Get Action.

"I know she is coming here to run away with him so he will escape paying," Franco said after he failed again today in obtaining a court ruling to force the count to begin immediately paying the temporary $250 monthly alimony granted to Edelmira.

Monarchist friends of the count said they also were pressing the queen to take him back to Europe because of his recent affair with Marta Rocafort, black-eyed Cuban artist's model. Marta is now in Havana but they were together almost daily for months before his illness.

Hitler Addresses Crowd of 100,000

Wurzburg, Germany, Sept. 17 (AP).—Reichsfuehrer Hitler was the central figure again today in an impressive martial ceremony in this Bavarian city.

Coming from the spectacle which climaxed the Nurnberg convention, Hitler, in the presence of 100,000 spectators, reviewed the fifth army corps and gave the troops their new colors.

Addressing his soldiers briefly, Der Fuehrer told them "the time of desolation, misery and despair" in the early years after the war was marked by a struggle between two conceptions—"the first contended Germany could be happy only as the most defenseless among nations; the second maintained good fortune comes only to him who is able to hold it in his strong fist."

"Since then 18 years have gone by and the second conception has conquered," Hitler declared.

Staunton Police Head Quits After 26 Years

Staunton, Va., Sept. 17 (AP).—Police Chief William Davis, whose demotion was recommended in a special committee report recently submitted to the Staunton council, has resigned after holding the office for 26 years, Mayor Harry Carter announced last night.

In resigning, the chief said he had "diligently endeavored to faithfully discharge the duties of chief of police" to the best of his ability and had tried to administer the office in "an honest and economical manner."

Charleston Is Terminus Of Trans-Ocean Clippers

Charleston, S. C., Sept. 17 (AP).—John C. Cooper, jr., vice president of Pan-American Airways, announced today Charleston had been selected as western terminus for a trans-atlantic service.

He said several survey flights will be run into the Charleston port in 1937 with a view to inaugurating service in 1938.

Plans Barrel Cruise.

Buffalo, N. Y., Sept. 17 (AP).—The 9-foot barrel in which he hopes to sail the Atlantic to Europe nearly completed, Ernest Biegazski, World War veteran, announced today he would be ready for a trial cruise to Cleveland "within a few days."

New Deal's Aid To Consumers Is Nearing End

commodities. With publication of "The Consumer" apparently blocked, there is no medium for putting the information before the public.

The magazine, which attained a circulation of 10,000, was published from October, 1935, through February, 1936. This spring the reorganized project requested permission of the Budget Bureau to resume publication. For a long time hopes were held out for approval, and material was prepared for inclusion in the next issue. Then the request was referred back to the project, without action. The project has 15,000 requests for the magazine.

Expenditures Reduced.

Current funds for the consumers' project come from the relief act of 1935, but expenditures from the original allotment have been scaled down by the Administration. Present expectations are that operations will case next year, with exhaustion of authorized funds. Some of its functions, such as price and standards research, may be transferred to other agencies.

With curtailment of the consumers' project's once ambitious scope of operations, the AAA Concumers' counsel, Donald Montgomery, is given virtually a free field, but that unit is subordinate to AAA policy. The consumers' project has discontinued food studies, and such as have been made in the past have been conducted in consultation with Montgomery.

Out of some 240 local consumers councils throughout the country, with which the old consumers division maintained close contact, only 15 or 20 now are very active. Recently the names of these groups have been changed to "Consumer Institutes" to emphasize the nongovernmental character of their co-operative efforts.

Recently the consumers' project has been calling on consumers to organize locally into these Consumer Institutes, and has been suggesting the lines of organization, emphasizing the local character of their work.

A "handbook" issued by the unit says in part:

"One reason for the neglect of the consumer's interest is that he has not been represented on authoritative bodies where policies and decisions affecting his welfare are made. This absence of representation is due to lack of organization and consequently of collective effort in this direction, a condition which should be at least partially remedied by creation of consumer institutes. Consumer representation is practically an undeveloped opportunity. Representation may be sought on State, county and municipal agencies of government whose major responsibility is consumer protection and service, viz.: Milk boards, bureaus of weights and measures, municipal marketing commissions, public utility boards, school boards, libraries, etc."

Chesterfield G. O. P. Will Organize Club

Steel Industry's Skies Brighter, Leaders Assert

Grace, Irvin and Girdler Optimistic in Talks at Cleveland Dinner.

By the Associated Press.

Cleveland, Sept. 17.—Three high executives of the steel industry, speaking at a steel day dinner at the Great Lakes Exposition, tonight pointed to brighter skies for their business and predicted a higher standard of living generally for the country.

Said E. G. Grace, president of Bethlehem Steel Company:

"I believe that the vast industrial development which has taken place in America is certain to continue and that our people will achieve an even higher standard of living, provided that the sound principles upon which our country has developed and grown great are continued."

Added W. A. Irvin, president of United States Steel Corporation:

"The skies are brighter—business has improved—weekly earnings are better—some profits have been made within the year."

And from T. M. Girdler, president of Republic Steel Corporation.

"I believe that the American standards of living will continue to rise."

Steel has played an "important part in the constantly improved standards of living in this country," Grace said.

"The steel industry has three obligations, to preserve fair treatment for labor; to deal fairly with the public; to exercise an intelligent trusteeship of the funds invested in the industry."

Grace said "the record shows how these obligations are being met."

"Rates of pay for labor," he said, "are equal to or above the levels of our most prosperous periods. The development of the industry * * *. It is this relationship which has played so important a role in producing upon the American continent the highest standard of living known to man."

He said the industry had met its obligation to the public by building the necessary facilities to meet expanding needs.

The 552,000 investors in the steel industry, he said, "have suffered patiently through the recent difficult years and it is to be hoped that they may soon have an equitable return on their investments."

Irvin stressed the "share-the-work" plan which he said was employed in the industry "to combat the demoralizing influences of the depression." Under this plan, he said, his corporation "gave employment to an average of 75,000 more men than would have been required to perform the limited amount of work then available."

"With the industry operating today at about 70 per cent of capacity on an 8-hour basis," he said, "48,000 more men are engaged in steel making than there were in 1929 when the industry was operating on an 85 per cent basis."

There were 420,000 wage earners in the steel industry in 1929, he said.

Girdler, who was dinner host to Grace and Irvin and a score of other steel executives, described new uses for steel. Modern civilization, he said, rests upon steel.

"Steel might be called the American metal," he said. "It is used everywhere and in everything."

Pawnee Bill Loses Wife of 50 Years In Auto Accident

Tonight the bereaved major, seriously injured in the accident and occasionally irrational from brain concussion, announced the funeral would be held here Sunday after the arrival of Mrs. Lillie's relatives from Germantown, Pa.

Jury Trial Granted In Baker Disorder

William M. Edwards, 29, president of the Dutch Baker Boy, Inc., pleaded not guilty and demanded a jury trial yesterday on a charge growing out of a scuffle following a traffic accident after which Edwards is alleged to have fired a shot.

Charged with discharging firearms, carrying a concealed weapon, and assault on a union official, Edwards was arraigned in court on one charge of threats in a menacing manner.

Edwards appeared in Police Court yesterday and after a conference with Assistant District Attorney Arthur Caldwell the charges were reduced to the one blanket charge. The bakery president was released on $500 bail.

According to police, a car driven by Edwards collided at Ninth and Kearney streets northeast early Wednesday with one operated by C. B. McCloskey, official of Bakers' Union No. 118, which is on strike at the Baker Boy. After the collision, when McCloskey stepped from his machine, Edwards, police said, stepped from his car and fired one shot. He was taken into custody and charged at the Twelfth Precinct station.

Vermont Bank Looted Of $5,000 by 2 Gunmen

Manchester Center, Vt., Sept. 17 (AP).—Two gunmen, garbed in overalls and caps similar to those worn by railway firemen, robbed the Factory Point National Bank of aproximately $5,000 shortly after noon today.

Brandishing pistols, the men, aged about 30 and 50, ordered Assistant Cashier Cornelius Whalen and Clerk Howard Marsden to lie on the floor and scooped up the money.

2 Robbers Get $4,000 At Pennsylvania Bank

Cecil, Pa., Sept. 17 (AP).—Two robbers forced three employes of the First National Bank of Cecil into a vault today and escaped with approximately $4,000. The employes freed themselves a few minutes after the robbers fled, and joined State police in the search.

The car used by the pair was found abandoned about a mile from the city. Cecil is about 25 miles from Pittsburgh.

Fund to Assist Crash Orphans Mounts to $40

Grandmother of Five Here to Take Them to Farm in North Carolina.

Contributions to The Washington Post's "Grandmother's Fund"—proposed by Mrs. Gertrude Trowbridge, of the Dodge Hotel, to aid five children orphaned by the death of their parents in an auto crash near Fredericksburg, Va., Saturday—rose to $40 yesterday.

The money will go to Mrs Irene Corley, grandmother of the children, who is here to take them back to her home in Mount Holly, N. C. Mrs. Corley said she would raise the youngsters—ranging in age from 3 to 12—on her small farm in North Carolina.

The children's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Earl Tompkinson, were buried Tuesday near the scene of the accident. They lived here at 1301 Fourth street southwest.

Neighbors have donated food and clothing in efforts to help Mrs. Corley support the youngsters. The father left only $6 when he died, and this went to defray hospital expenses.

Lee Monument At Sharpsburg Is Dedicated

Shaft Marks Headquarters Site of General at Battle in 1862.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Sharpsburg, Md., Sept. 17.—On this field of battle where the armies of the Union and Confederate States engaged in a fierce one-day fight on September 17, 1862, today, the seventy-fourth anniversary of the battle, found Confederate sympathizers gathered to unveil the first monument of the South on the battlefield.

It was a granite shaft marking the site of the headquarters of Gen. Robert E. Lee, the Confederate commander, from September 15 to 18, 1862. It is located in what was previously an oak grove beside the road that leads from this town toward Shepherdstown.

Fitting on the occasion of the dedication of the marker was the presence of the great-grandson of Gen. Lee, Robert Edward Lee, who unveiled it, and its acceptance by a grandson, Dr. George Bolling Lee, of New York City.

The monument was erected by the West Virginia division of the United Daughters of the Confederacy which was in charge of the dedicatory ceremonies attended by 1,000 persons. Mrs. R. Raymond Woolf, president, presided and introduced the speakers.

Judge Kenna Speaks.

The oration on the occasion was delivered by Judge John N. Kenna, of the West Virginia Supreme Court, who praised Gen. Lee's ability as an organizer and strategist.

Judge Kenna traced Gen. Lee's earlier campaigns until his entry into Maryland, likening the battle of Sharpsburg and its fatalistic circumstances to Waterloo. "Had it not been for these circumstances Sharpsburg would have been a different story," he declared. The finding of Gen. Lee's special order No. 191 by a Union private where it had been dropped on the streets of Frederick, revealing Gen. Lee's entire Maryland campaign and the division of his army, was one of the turning points of the Northern campaign. Describing Sharpsburg, with 85,000 Union troops opposed by 45,000 Confederates, the speaker said that 17 per cent of the troops engaged were either killed or wounded.

"Facing these odds, Lee demonstrated his ability as a tactician at Sharpsburg, which the Confederate general considered as the most skillful he had ever fought. Sharpsburg may be considered as the high mark of the Confederacy," said Judge Kenna.

Bloodiest Battle.

Dr. Lee, in accepting the monument, said that Sharpsburg was undoubtedly the bloodiest and fiercest encounter of the Civil War. Lee's grandson said that Lincoln selected the moment after the battle for issuing his emancipation proclamation. "But the Confederates emerged from the war with stainless swords and shields," he said.

The program at the memorial exercises was opened with selections by the Rohersville Band and invocation by the Right Rev. Robert E. Lee Strider, Bishop Co-adjutor of West Virginia. Remarks were made by Harper R. Garrett, of the National Park Service, custodian of the battlefield, and Capt. John Kyd Beckenbaugh, superintendent of the battlefield.

Among those attending the ceremonies here was the Maryland State Antietam advisory committee, recently named by Gov. Harry W. Nice to assist in the national Antietam celebration next year on the occasion of the seventy-fifth anniversary of the battle. The committee, headed by Alexander Armstrong, Baltimore, chairman, met and organized in the morning.

Arms Smugglers Are Sought at Gulf

By the United Press.

Treasury law enforcement officials mobilized their agents last night in ports along the Gulf of Mexico in an attempt to capture two trucks believed speeding south with arms for a plotted revolution in a Latin American republic.

The Treasury had reported seizure of a third truck at Biloxi, Miss., and a motor vessel at Atlantic City, N. J., on which it apparently had been planned to ship the munitions until the activity of Federal agents caused a change in tactics.

The captured truck was carrying 200 rifles, 21,000 rounds of ammunition, some war chemicals and some furniture, apparently as a "blind." Three men were arrested, including Willard Campbell, described by the Treasury as "a notorious smuggler at liberty under parole." Two days later Coast Guard men at Atlantic City boarded Campbell's boat, the Manchonach, after a report that arms apparently were being loaded aboard the vessel secretly. However, when the agents boarded the ship, the cargo was not there.

Two to Fly Pacific.

Almeda, Calif., Sept. 17 (AP).—Two Japanese fliers left here today for Washington and New York in preparation for a transpacific flight. The fliers, Benny Chogin and John Takemoto, were accompanied by K. E. Masuyama, head of the Buddhist Church in America. The plane was loaded with flowers, gifts from Japanese societies to President Roosevelt.

Speakers Tell Of Silver Spring Improvements

Enforcing of Speed Limit, New Traffic Lights Recommended.

Improvement of Silver Spring as a residential and business center was discussed at a dinner held last night in the Woodside Methodist Episcopal Church by the Silver Spring Business Men's Association which county officials attended.

The business men recounted their achievements of the last six months and planned for their expansion in the future.

It was brought out by the speakers that although the immediate Silver Spring area has a population of 15,000, the population of its trading area is 50,000.

Improvements recommended by the group to take care of the traffic situation include enforcing of the speed limit, the placing of traffic control lights at Georgia and Sligo avenues and at Georgia avenue and the District line, and the cutting down of the sidewalk on Georgia avenue from Sligo avenue to Bonifant street.

Underpass Change.

To take care of the present problems and future growth it was further recommended that the B. & O. Railroad underpass be reconstructed to have one span and that the steel pillar in the roadway be removed; the extension of Sixteenth street to Georgia avenue and the extension of Montgomery avenue to the Bladensburg road.

William H. Reynolds advocated adoption of a policy that would bring light industries to the Silver Spring area. He declared there are several thousand acres available in the county along the B. & O. Railroad, which would be suitable for the establishment of industries. A development of this type would add a million dollars to the assessable basis of this area, he asserted.

William H. Carlin, chairman of the traffic committee, said his committee and the board of directors felt that strict enforcement of the one-hour parking law in the business area was detrimental to the interests of the association. He stated that his committee would make an effort to have the ordinance changed to a more liberal limit.

He recommended for the present that the police be asked to tag the cars with courtesy tags warning them of the infraction, instead of arresting them in "wholesale lots," as they have in previous drives.

Speaking of school needs, William H. Hopkins declared that the present increase in those attending the public schools in this area calls for the addition per year of ten classrooms.

These rooms, he said, would be needed primarily in the new Junior High School at Montgomery Hills, which will be crowded at the time of its completion in January, and in the Parkside School in the Seven Oaks section.

Japan's Foes Plan To 'Try' Emperor

New York, Sept. 17 (AP).—A Greenwich Village auditorium was hired and Japanese Ambassador to the United States invited to attend tonight a mock trial of Emperor Hirohito of Japan on a charge of murdering Chinese intellectuals.

A spokesman for the American friends of the Chinese people, sponsors of the program said the Ambassador, the acting Japanese consul general in New York City, or their representatives, had been invited to hear the trial.

Roger Baldwin of the American Civil Liberties Union was designated as "magistrate" and the principal witnesses listed for the prosecution were Gen. Fang Chen Wu who harried the Japanese in North China in 1933, and Miss Wu-Kau-Liu, daughter of a leader of the Kuo Min Tang party, who arrived in this country two days ago.

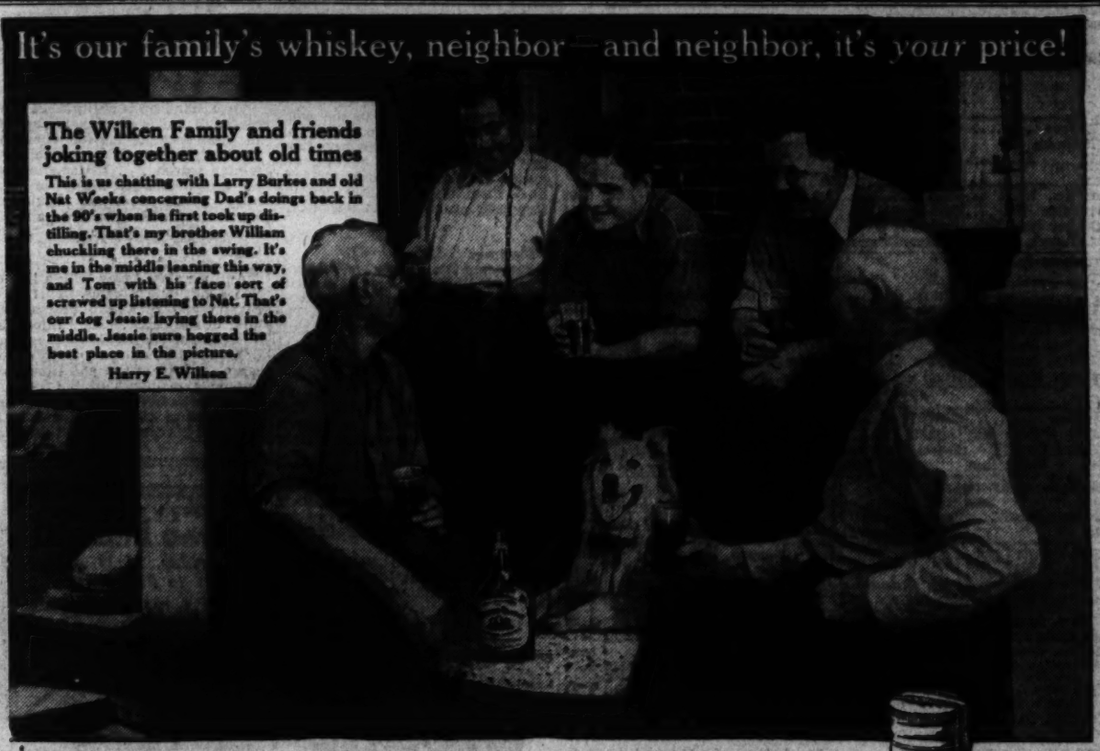
It's our family's whiskey, neighbor—and neighbor, it's your price!

The Wilken Family and friends joking together about old times

This is us chatting with Larry Burkes and old Nat Weeks concerning Dad's doings back in the 90's when he first took up distilling. That's my brother William chuckling there in the swing. It's me in the middle leaning this way, and Tom with his face sort of screwed up listening to Nat. That's our dog Jessie laying there in the middle. Jessie sure hogged the best place in the picture.
Harry E. Wilken



Dad's cronies say for tastiness Our Family's Whiskey can't be beat!

Old Nat Weeks and Larry Burkes—they've lived in this distilling town their whole life—and you'd sure have to go some to find folks as fussy about the tastiness of whiskey as them. And the both of them were remarking just the other day how for good tasting and easy swallowing whiskey there's nothing that stacks up with the Wilken Family's Recipe.

Well that's the way it goes. Real old-timers well acquainted with Grandad when he was distilling, and knowing Dad all through his forty and more years of distilling—every last one of them says in this Family's Recipe of ours we got something nothing else can touch. But what makes me feel good is seeing everyone—no matter who they are or where they live—thinking just the same as Nat and Larry!

Hepbron Gets La Roe Pledge Of Co-operation

Crime Expert and Church Leader Hold Parley on Campaign.

Plans for Washington's battle against crime were discussed yesterday at a meeting between James M. Hepbron, acting director of the Washington Criminal Justice Association, and Wilbur LaRoe, jr., member of the District Parole Board and chairman of the civic affairs committee of the Washington Federation of Churches.

Hepbron explained aims of the criminal justice group and received assurances of co-operation from LaRoe. In outlining his plans to attack the local crime problem, Hepbron promised he would give consideration to recent suggestions offered by the federation committee.

In a letter to Hepbron, the committee described the District crime situation as "appalling," citing inadequate facilities to cope with an ever-growing problem.

The crime body director was invited to attend a meeting of the parole board and said he would also meet with the church federation committee at an early date.

Meanwhile, in a letter to United States Attorney Leslie C. Garnett yesterday, Maj. Ernest W. Brown, superintendent of police, proposed that future crime investigations by members of his department include the assistance of a Federal prosecutor.

He suggested that an assistant United States attorney be assigned to work with detectives in the investigation of major crimes. The proposal was accepted by Garnett with the comment

"It might be a good idea."

Under the proposed plan, Garnett would assign an assistant to work with the Detective Bureau on all homicide cases.

The prosecutor would accompany police to the crime scene and work in close liaison in collecting evidence and preparing the case for court.

At the present time, a prosecutor attends only a coroner's inquest and does not take part in the actual police investigation.

On numerous occasions, Maj. Brown has requested assignment of a prosecutor to aid in crime investigations, but his request always has been refused.

Hepbron said yesterday he considered the proposal "an excellent one."

Dance Teams Have Spotlight Of Night Clubs

Live Snake Used in Act of Tania and Kiroff at Cocoanut Grove.

By Chanticleer.

Dance teams seem to hold the center of the stage in the after-dark spots this week, what with the Wonder Dancers becoming town talk at the Shoreham Terrace and the appearance of a live snake in the act of Tania and Kiroff at Coacoanut Grove lending a touch of definite realism.

The Wonder Dancers are, of course, Frances Woods and Billy Bray, it being Miss Woods who has been deaf since birth and who hurdled all the obvious difficulties in becoming a star in her field. Billy Bray "discovered" her about five years ago—that is, he discovered her sense of rhythm and natural gracefulness and set about to teach her to dance by way of music vibrations from the floor. He was a physical culture teacher at the time.

• • • •

The snake used by Tania and Kiroff is the real goods. It seems that such "props" are very effective from the point of view of the artist's feel of the interpretation as well as good showmanship for the audience. After all, who wants to see the "Dance of the Forbidden Necklace" if the venomous creature which finally strangles the gal is just a long-coiled spring and some painted cloth?

Muriel Boyd is being duplicated at Cocoanut Grove this week, too, in the person of Helen Shaw. Helen is a dancer, however, as well as a songstress.

• • • •

George is getting votes as the busiest man in town this week. George, be it known, is the suave new headwaiter at Maryland Club Gardens. He's one of those fellows with endless energy who slips around finding places for old guests, putting the bus boys through their paces and conferring with Chef Russell on whether to hold the garlic three or three and one-half inches above the batch of stroganoff sauce while stirring same. George spends his time off at the Congressional Library poring over new recipes!

Human nature being what it is, the bartender at Brinkley's (down Southeast way) should know right now that the appearance of his name in this space is always assured him if murder is the alternative. And not my murder, either. He's merely one of those fellows who felt a first-class slaying probably would be the only way in which his name ever would appear in the public prints.

• • • •

Charlotte and Tinker, seen ever so often in these precincts, are at La Paree this week. Lots of slapstick, comedy stuff. Al Sakol and his orchestra for your dancing . . . Jimmy Byrd is back at the Mayfair Cafe of All Nations—following his second vacation of the year . . . We're still waiting on the final touches of the decorator at Ramon's Connecticut late supper spot. But from the work that's already done—it will be worth waiting for.

Betty Lee and Lillian Brent are pictured elsewhere on this page. They're the feature attraction at the Dude Ranch, you know. Betty is a jazz toe, hula, Oriental and tap dance specialist. Lillian goes in for acrobatic, rhythm tap and shim-sham. Hot dog! as we provincials say.

Matt Windsor is still absent from his Club Volga Boatman—engaged in the very delightful chore of signing performers for his fall and winter season . . . 250 couples can be accommodated nicely on that huge dance floor at Boulevard Farms where Farmer Shea and his Hired Help provide the swing music.

• • • •

And we close today with a line or two about dance teams. This time, Manno and Strafford, gracing the floor of the Lotus. They inject the European touch into their programs. Lenora's Debutantes provide the cause for intense concentration from the male members of the ringsiders. Reason obvious: The Debs are the dancing chorus. Bill Strickland and his orchestra for the dancing.

Presidential Poll

Contest Column

This column will be conducted daily until October 30, closing date of The Washington Post's 1936 Presidential Poll Contest. Questions of contestants will be answered and other information, helpful to the contestant in predicting the winner of the election and the States he will carry, will be supplied from time to time.

$1,000 in cash prizes will be awarded 34 contest winners, with $500 for first prize. The contest closes at midnight, Friday, October 30.

Q. How is the Lemke campaign progressing and upon which of the two major party standard-bearers is Mr. Lemke's candidacy having the greater effect?

A. The answer to this question, together with a complete tabulation, by States, of Lemke's vote-getting ability, will be answered Sunday on the AMERICA SPEAKS page of The Washington Post.

Q. Which States, according to the first four AMERICA SPEAKS polls on Landon and Roosevelt strength with the voters, have shifted from one side to the other since the Landon nomination?

A. The first Landon-Roosevelt AMERICA SPEAKS poll, reported in The Washington Post, July 12, gave Governor Landon 21 States and President Roosevelt 27 States. In the second poll, published August 9, Montana, Colorado and West Virginia (with 18 electoral votes) slipped out of the G. O. P. column, while Wyoming and Michigan (with 22 electoral votes) shifted to the Republican side.

The third poll, published August 23, showed Michigan (19 electoral votes) going back into the Democratic column. The fourth poll, reported September 6, showed Michigan and Colorado (25 electoral votes) going back to Landon, while Ohio (26 electoral votes) shifted out of the Republican column for the first time.

Each one of these shifting, "on-the-line" States may be vital points in the election. No other State, with the exception of these, has shifted from one side to the other since the first Landon-Roosevelt poll was taken in July.

Q. When will the fifth AMERICA SPEAKS Landon-Roosevelt poll be released?

A. This Sunday, September 13, exclusively, in Washington, in The Washington Post.

RCA Raises Wages.

Camden, N. J., Sept. 17 (AP).—The R. C. A. Manufacturing Co. today announced wage increases of from 5 to 10 per cent for 9,000 employes in its Camden plant. E. T. Hamilton, vice president in charge of labor, said the new scale would become effective October 5.

Judge Witnesses Film of Nudists, Rules It Obscene

Chicago, Sept. 17 (AP).—Motion pictures of nudists, Municipal Judge Samuel Trude ruled today, are obscene.

He gave his decision after his courtroom had been converted into a movie theater and two reels of the film figuring in the litigation had been viewed by an audience of some 40 persons.

The pictures were taken in the Zoro Nature Park, near Roselawn, Ind., by Stephen P. Holish, of Chicago. He shipped them to the Eastman Kodak Co. at Rochester, N. Y., for development. The firm declined to return them. Holish filed suit for their recovery.

Charles Parker, attorney for the defendant concern, said the company's action was based on his fear of violation of a State law forbidding the production of obscene matter.

"There is only one way to determine whether these films are objectionable," he added. "That is to show them."

The jurist and Alois Knapp, owner of the Nature Park and counsel for the plaintiff, agreed. The shades were drawn, a projector and screen were set up and the spectators—mostly attaches of other courts—saw an unclothed company frolic on a sandy beach, engage in impromptu boxing bouts and enjoy a picnic lunch.

Judge Trude ruled the movies were obscene and the Eastman Co. could destroy them. Knapp, contending they were in the art category, declared he would appeal.

Radio's Power to Stir World Discord Noted

Geneva, Sept. 17 (AP).—Arnold Raestad, former Norwegian foreign minister, tonight said political broadcasting "has enormous potentialities for fomenting international discord." He spoke as president of the International Broadcast Conference, which convened here today.

Belgium reserved the right to cut off foreign transmission deemed abusive or harmful to her peace and order. Gerald C. Gross, chief of the international section of the United States Federal Communications Commission, attended in a privtae capacity. The United States was not represented officially.

On the Air Today

Things have come to a pretty pass. Wednesday finds me in New York doing a mail-man-on-his-day-off stunt. That is, I am by late afternoon. In other words, a great yen to see Stoopnagle and Budd is sneaking up on me.

The first shock comes when a very delightul young person employed by one of the prominent radio interests agrees that seeing Stoopnagle and Budd would be a good idea. In fact, will go along. Imagine the proverbial motorman going on the proverbial ride and you get the general idea.

Shock two: Business of phoning the sponsor's representative for for the necessary two tickets which ends with the definite and positive word that only one ticket is available! I say in indignant tones:

"But Fred, you can't say 'no.' Its never done to a radio writer. He's sacred. He gets into shows when nobility, vice presidents and the sponsor's best friends are turned down! Its revolutionary, unfair practice, contrary to the rules——."

The answer still is "no." (The s. r. is Frederick William Wile, jr., and I suspect that the reports on the Astaire show of the evening before haven't been any too good. Fred is publicity chief for the Astaire program, too.)

After having arranged for many (other) important persons seeing "big shows," I find myself unable to wangle two tickets from the sponsor's and so I try other tactics. I get the two tickets.

Shock three: Radio City's huge auditorium is not filled to capacity after all. Oddly enough some 30 or so seats are vacant far off to one side. What a day, what a day!

• • • •

My vote for the country's leading unsung air hero goes to Harry Von Zell. I've seen any number of radio's most popular shows, but no one yet has ever approached Von Zell's performance in those important five minutes immediately preceding air time. When Fred Wile's organization employed the former Columbia announcer to work for its shows exclusively, a good day's work was done.

Von Zell is perfect at the job of warning the audience to the work ahead. He kids them about his "Applause" sign. He convinces them that it's all a lot of hokum, this radio broadcasting, and tactfully lines them up for wildly exciting responses exactly when needed.

Blum Answers Hitler, Defends Democracies

Premier Makes His Speech Even as New Clashes Imperil Peace.

change of views with the United States, Germany and Japan.

The French delegation to the annual League Assembly at Geneva, a foreign office spokesman said tonight, will press for trade revival and arms limitation conferences to halt what was termed here "Europe's march to war."

Strike Is Settled.

Earlier, the Lille textile strike, largest of a widespread wave, was settled after laborious negotiations in which Premier Blum acted as peacemaker. The agreement gave 35,000 workers a 6 per cent increase in wages and allowed employers authority over factory delegates named by workers to represent them in collective bargaining. Settlement at Lille, however, left numerous other strikes in industrial sections and the movement continued to spread.

Socialist Leader Blum, in his reply to Germany, declared the world's democracies during the last century "showed at least as much stability as dictatorships even when the dictator was a genius."

"France does not pretend to impose on other governments the principles of governing which it finds wisest and most just," he said. "France rejects entirely the idea of a war of propaganda of a war of reprisals.

Defends Principle.

Defending the revolutionary principle of government, the Socialist premier said:

"Without the civil equality proclaimed by the French revolution, the authoritative states of Europe would not have at their heads men who come out of the depths of the people and draw from this origin their merit and their pride."

(Hitler is the son of an obscure customs official; Premier Mussolini, of Italy, is the son of a blacksmith.)

His speech was broadcast in French. It was translated into English, German, Italian and Spanish and rebroadcast from stations nearest those countries.

"There are in France," he said, "doctrines and parties which clash. France sees that as a principle of force and not of weakness.

"But as France is unanimous in her wish for peace, so will she be unanimous tomorrow * * * if it is a question of preserving the security of the fatherland—even more so to defend her own soil."

The premier extolled the governments of the United States and Great Britain and asked:

"Was it not thanks to democracy that the United States was able to carry out in several years a prodigious economic restoration without compromising legal order for one instant?"

Blum appealed for a halt of the European arms race and reaffirmed France's faith in the principles of the League of Nations.

Peace, he declared, is "indivisible," and cannot be maintained solely by an armed bloc.

Turning to the Spanish Civil War, in which his government is obligated to a strict neutrality course, the premier said:

"The causes of the war which weigh on the world are already too heavy for France to aggravate them by the design of doctrinal crusade, whether it be for the ideas it thinks just and good, or against the systems it believes false or bad.

"France shall stand unanimously firm against any pressure or any threats against the full independence of her conduct, full liberty of decisions and choices.

"France wants to coerce no one. She will not permit herself to be coerced directly or indirectly by anyone.

"Peace must be general because war is general and because there is not, a single armed conflict in Europe which could be limited or isolated."

In reply to Germany's asserted efforts to wean France away from her Russian pact, the premier said:

"The government manifests simultaneously its firm intention to prolong such agreements until there is a universal organization of peoples united by peace in common prosperity."

Meanwhile headquarters of the "French Social Party" announced 15,000 new members had joined the group last month. Former members of the disbanded Croix de Feu also transferred membership to the new party.

The anti-government posters were headlined with the single word "Mobilization!"

Charge Isolation.

"Frenchmen, do you want to see that call on your walls?" they asked.

The signs charged France was more isolated in a rearming Europe than ever before, that the cost of living had soared out of proportion to pay increases brought about by the Popular Front government and appealed for recruits to the La Rocque organization.

The French representatives at the League's Council meeting opening tomorrow will seek convocation of the monetary and tariff conference advocated by the League's economics committee officials, it was indicated.

Charles Spinasse, French minister of economy, was included in the delegation especially for such negotiations in which the French would like to see stabilization of currences and lowering of trade barriers.

Spokesmen for the French government frequently have expressed belief that better trade relations between nations would relieve much political tension.

Quarrels Threaten Unity.

Hendaye, France, Sept. 17 (AP).—Quarrels threatened unity of the Spanish government's northern army tonight, and rebels awaited an open break to facilitate a new offensive.

Anarchists and Basque Nationalists within the government's forces at Orio, just west of San Sebastian, vealed. Each faction sought to impose its mandate upon the army.

were at odds, reliable sources re-

The Nationalists broke first with Anarchists in the surrender of San Sebastian last week, and prevented the latter from firing the city when they fled to Orio before advancing rebels.)

Claiming new victories near Oviedo today rebel commander Gen. Emilio Mola was represented as awaiting a flare-up of government troops to help his fighting men conquer.

The Basque Nationalists continued in power at Bilboa, while the Anarchists were reported in control of Santander, a short distance west on the Spanish coast.

Government leaders did not attempt to conceal their anxiety lest the resignace of the rebels be weakened through internal dissension.

Geoghan Cleared By Gov. Lehman In Drukman Case

By the United Press.

Albany, N. Y., Sept. 17.—Gov. Herbert H. Lehman exonerated District Attorney William F. X. Geoghan, of Kings County, tonight of any wrongdoing in his investigation of Brooklyn's celebrated Drukman murder case.

He dismissed removal charges preferred against the white-haired district attorney by an extraordinary grand jury, which returned indictments in the case after an original jury failed.

The Governor disclosed his decision in a lengthy statement five days after completion of Geoghan's ouster hearing in the oakpaneled executive chamber—the same room where former Mayor James J. Walker of New York City faced removal charges before then Gov. Franklin D. Roosevelt.

"In opening the hearing I said I was conscious of my duty to do justice to the people of the State and to the district attorney," Lehman said.

"In fulfillment of that duty I find that the charges against the district attorney have not been sustained, and they are accordingly dismissed."

The Governor said that testimony and evidence presented during the 13 days of the proceedings disclosed "one significant fact" that "stands out above all others—there was no proof of dishonesty, corruption, wilful misconduct or bad faith on the part of the district attorney."

Notes Demand $10,000 For Cuban 'Revolution'

Havana, Sept. 17 (AP).—Frank Steinhart, jr., prominent American executive, reported to army intelligence agents today he had received two threatening letters demanding $10,000 for a "revolution."

Three Cubans reported receipt of similar letters demanding smaller sums, and a large part of Cuba's army intelligence corps was set to work on the cases.

Police said one of the letters to Steinhart, who is vice president of the Havana Electric Railway, advised him that if he reported the matter to police he would "see what we are capable of doing."

Pickford's Million-a-Year Unequaled; Sequel to Thalberg's Death.

By the United Press.

Hollywood, Sept. 17.—When picture players speak of the "good old days" they aren't just sentimentalizing—for all ballyhoo to the contrary notwithstanding actor salaries have been slipping ever since a peak way back in 1916-17.

Mary Pickford started the war-time film salary boom with a hop from $2,000 a week to over $1,000,000 a year, a mark never since equaled.

Modern eyes may pop at Greta Garbo's reported $9,000 a week, but it all adds up only to $468,000 a year, less than half the Pickford figure. On a mathematical basis the great Garbo isn't nearly as hot as Cowboy Tom Mix used to be back in 1925 when he was dragging down $17,000 a week from Fox films—$884,000 a year.

Pickford completed a contract at $2,000 a week with Adolphe Zukor in 1915, and Zukor was trying to whittle down her new contract demand of $2,500 when Charlie Chaplin was signed by the old Mutual Co. at $670,000 a year.

That started a competitive bidding campaign which ended with Zukor recapturing Pickford on a two-year contract at $1,040,000 per year, plus a $300,000 signing bonus.

Last accurate figures on film salaries were those for 1934 reported to the House Ways and Means Committee early in 1935. Undoubtedly these are somewhat changed now, but probably not enough to alter the comparison.

Some of the high-priced moderns drew:

Will Rogers, $324,314; Janet Gaynor, $252,383; Winfield Sheehan, $300,000; Lew Ayres, $103,499; Warner Baxter, $184,000; Shirley Temple, $23,064 (now reported at $75,000 a picture); Lee Tracy, $39,583; Claudette Colbert, $36,666 (now reported $150,000 a picture, and she makes about three a year); Ronald Coleman, $108,000; Wallace Beery, $100,000; Clark Gable, $94,666; Charles Laughton, $65,000; Victor McLaglen, $30,000; Grace Moore, $35,000; Darryl F. Zanuck, $104,000, and Constance Bennett, $40,000.

Sequel to the death of Irving Thalberg demonstrates again even grief has a publicity value in Hollywood. A leading show-your-card joint announced in a black-bordered quarter-page trade paper ad that its autumn opening was postponed "owing to the passing of a friend."

Margot Grahame roused up at 5:30 a. m. to get a trans-oceanic telephone report from her husband, Francis Lister, on his new play "Follow Your Saint," which opened in Edinburg. The Scots stamped it okay, she said, and Lister takes it to London next week.

Lawrence Tibbett will fly to New York Friday the soft way. He and Mrs. Tibbet will be first passengers aboard the new sleeper planes.

Florence Lake admits she's separated from Jack Goode, vaudevillian currently touring the East with Leon Erroll's Show. She has been trotting about recently with Lee Tracy, but says there is no heart interest involved.

Poor, Downtrodden Dummy.

Average players are enormously handicapped by their deeply ingrained habit of regarding the dummy as a mere auxiliary, often invaluable in protecting or building tricks for their own hands, but hardly to be looked on as an equally important unit.

Aside from habit there is no basis whatever for this conception. Dummy's tricks count just as much on the score as declarer's. In fact, it is a mistake to think of declarer's hand and dummy as two separate entities. The 26 cards should be subtly blended in a declarer's mind and a plan of operation selected on that basis. Today's hand will be extremely baffling to everyone who is a victim of habit.

North, dealer.
Both sides vulnerable.

The bidding:

| North | East | South | West |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1 diamond | Pass | 1 heart | Pass |
| 2 hearts | Pass | 4 clubs | Double |
| 4 diamonds | Double | 5 hearts | Pass |
| 6 hearts | Pass | Pass | Double |
| Pass | Pass | Pass | |

The bidding, as may be seen, was peculiar to say the least. North felt that his hand was slightly too weak for an opening no trump (in which he was wrong; no trump was the correct bid) and therefore chose his higher and better three card minor. South's first two responses were all right, but his jump from four diamonds to five hearts was a "stretch," particularly since he should have feared the adverse club distribution after West's double. The mere fact that North, in response to the four club asking bid, showed the diamond ace and second round club control was not merely enough to justify South's strong slam-try. (Asking bids, good as they are, can not carry on alone. Their user must have a fair sense of values.)

But, fortunately for himself and partner, South's play proved immeasurably superior to his bidding. He ruffed West's opening spade lead and entered the dummy with a diamond, to ruff a second spade. This process was repeated with the second diamond honor and a third spade, and then dummy's king of clubs was used as entry for the ruff of the last spade with the ace of trumps. South's last trump then was led and dummy's king-queen-jack were played, declarer discarding his losing diamond and one club. Now a low club was led from dummy and declarer nonchalantly put on his seven. West won with the nine, but had nothing left but clubs and, therefore, had to lead away from his queen up to South's tenace. Of course, it was lucky for the declarer that West had held only two diamonds, since otherwise he would have been able to exit safely. But the fact remains that the hand was played correctly, on the basis of the bidding, and the one opportunity grasped for fulfilling the overambitious contract. The crux was the conversion of dummy's three trumps into the master trump holding.

About The Showshops

(With Gerald G. Gross, Batting for Nelson B. Bell)

HERE and everywhere:

Miss Helen Hayes, this desk is informed, has been elected (unanimously) honorary colonel of District of Columbia Chapter, Rainbow Division Veterans. Her playwright husband, Charles MacArthur, served with the Rainbow.

What Washington stage and screen critic is reliably reported to be packing for Hollywood to hang his cap in the M-G-M studios?

Attorney General Homer S. Cummings will be honor guest when the Variety Club opens its fall season Monday with a luncheon at the Willard. Carter T. Barron (Loew mogul) will be the king for a day.

His role completed in Mae West's "Go West Young Man," Randolph Scott is coming East—he's on "The Chief" right now—to join his bride, Mariona duPont Somerville Scott, in Wilmington, Del. They will go South, to the Scott plantation in Orange County, Va. (And don't be confused by all the directions.)

Candidates for the title of Washington's tallest man will tote their elongated persons to the Rialto at 5 p. m. Monday, there to test the club chairs which have been installed. Winner receives a season pass for two; runner-up, a single season pass.

Close friends of Norma Shearer, widowed this week by the death of Irving Thalberg, are certain she will carry on with her picture career despite reports to the contrary.

The seventh season of the Loew's Boys Cadet Band gets under way at 9 a. m. tomorrow when candidates report at the Capitol. John B. MacKenzie again will be in command this year.

Adolph Zukor, Paramount boss, arrives in Hollywood tomorrow after business conferences in New York. He and Mrs. Zukor will take a house in Beverly Hills.

When the Rialto reopens its doors with "Grand Hotel" September 26, one of its lures will be 10-cent parking after 6:30. The same service also will be available to patrons of the Little, which is under the same management.

Gladys Swarthout, whose lovely presence and pleasing soprano were practically wasted in the late "Give Us This Night," will sing Sunday at a Tyrolean picnic to be staged in the Malibu Mountains in honor of Director Edward Sutherland and members of the "Champagne Waltz" cast.

And one of the year's best laughs, what with Hollywood so boastful of its child prodigies, is contained in the bulletin from United Artists stating that production of "The Adventures of Tom Sawyer" has been postponed at least two weeks because of extreme difficulty in finding suitable juveniles to play Tom Sawyer and Huck Finn. "Shooting" was to have started this week.

* * * *

That you may be straightened out on your opening schedules, revivals, return engagements, holdovers, etc., on the new week's calendar—Belasco departs from its Saturday opening routine to begin regular showings of "The House of Rothschild" this morning. "Romeo and Juliet" goes into its third week at the National Sunday; "Anthony Adverse" shifts from the Earle to the Metropolitan for a week beginning today, and "Swing Time," at RKO-Keith's embarks upon a third week this morning. "The Informer" remains at the Little through Wednesday, to be succeeded by Conrad Veidt in "Power."

* * * *

Nova Pilbeam, the 16-year-old English girl you'll be seeing in "Nine Days a Queen," coming to the Earle today, likes tennis (she was born in Wimbledon, international racket center), swimming, her black and white cat (named "Slapbang"), her pet goldfish (no name) and Dickens. At the age of 5 she played in an amateur production called "Children of Laughter," made her professional debut at 12 in "Toad of Toad Hall" by A. A. Milne and Ian Ray and, two years later, defeated hundreds of aspirants to the juvenile role in "Little Friend," her first picture. She refused to change her name, admittedly a poor one for an actress, and her garden is famous for its roses and lilies of the valley.

Cedric Hardwicke, who places Lady Jane (Nova) on the throne, decided to become an actor at the age of 4 when he was impressed by the circus' sword swallower. Critics raved over his performance in Shaw's "The Applecart." In 1934 he was knighted by the late King George V.

Desmond Tester, who may become another Freddie Bartholomew, is King Edward VI in "Nine Days a Queen." He is 16, was interested in the theater by his sister, likes to camp and sail boats, looks askance at offers to come to Hollywood and is a veteran of both screen and radio.

* * * *

"My Man Godfrey," when it finally reaches Keith's, where it is scheduled to follow "Swing Time," will have smashed house records in nearly every city where it has been exhibited. Already it is playing to greater business than "Magnificent Obsession" or "Show Boat."

Starring William Powell and Carole Lombard, who used to be man and wife, "My Man Godfrey," when shown in Los Angeles, put both "Magnificent Obsession" and "Showboat," Universal's most profitable ventures of 1934-35 and 1935-36, respectively, in the shade. Seattle, San Francisco, Toledo, Pittsburgh, St. Louis, Indianapolis, Denver and other cities were correspondingly cordial to the comedy.

* * * *

Among early winners in the Capitol's quest of Greater Washington couples who celebrate their ninth wedding anniversaries this month, while the theater is marking its ninth birthday, are Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Lewis, 1659 K street northeast; Mr. and Mrs. R. T. Harmsberger, 2738 North Larcom Lane, Arlington, and Mrs. Ida Briggs and her husband, of 724 Third street northwest. Another Anniversary Week guest of the management will be Mrs. A. C. Whiterite, 813 Ryams avenue, Hyattsville, Md., who was present when the movie house was opened as the Fox in September, 1927.

* * * *

A late announcement by the Columbia is to the effect "The Gorgeous Hussy," which yesterday concluded a three-week engagement at the Palace, will be brought into the former theater a week from today.

Also, the Earle flashes us that when "The Texas Rangers," with Jack Oakie, Fred MacMurray and Jean Parker, and Leo Carrillo (in person) make their initial bows next Friday, the supporting vaudeville acts will include the Cappy Barry Harmonica Swing Ensemble; Jeanne, Jack and Joe, in "Smile Service," and the Five DeGuchis, tumblers.

Anthony's Beautiful Mother

U.S. Newspapermen Detained by Rebels

St. Jean de Luz, France, Sept. 17 (AP).—United States Ambassador Claude G. Bowers said today he was using his good offices to obtain the release of three American newspaper correspondents reported "detained" by Spanish insurgents at Carceres.

The three were said to be John T. Whitaker, of the New York Herald-Tribune, and Floyd Gibbons and H. R. Knockerbocker, of Universal Service and International News Service.

Reports reaching the frontier stated the three were arrested on charges of failing to obtain military permits from the Burgos provisional junta.

The ambassador said any action toward obtaining their release would necessarily be indirect and unofficial, since the United States does not recognize the insurgent government.

Mollison to Start Ocean Hop Oct. 17

By the Associated Press.

London, Sept. 17.—J. A. Mollison, Australian flier, announced today he will take off from Floyd Bennett Field, Brooklyn, October 17 on a transatlantic flight to England.

He said he hopes to reach Croydon Airport, outside London, in 17 hours on a flight through the substratosphere.

Mollison declared he will leave London for New York aboard the liner Paris tonight.

After the New York-England flight, he asserted, he may try for two new aerial records, including a solo trip around the world.

If the weather is suitable, he declared, he plans to attempt to set a new flying record from England to South Africa and later might "consider" a flight around the world at the Equator.

Pacific Sailors' Union Asks Increase in Wages

San Francisco, Sept. 17 (AP).—A proposed agreement calling for an increase of wages for seamen was submitted to the shipowners by the Sailors Union of the Pacific today.

Harry Lundeberg, secretary-treasurer of the union, declaring he expected to complete negotiations before the present award expires on September 30, sought wage increases from the present scale of $62.50 a month to $80 for able seamen.

Webster Rewrites The Dictionary.

Hollywood, Sept. 17.

Noah Webster, the big dictionary man, arrived in Hollywood. The language confused him. # Britain Blamed For Holy Land Reign of Terror

U. S. Must Take Steps to End Violence, Says Copeland, Back From Tour.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Sept. 17.—Senator Royal S. Copeland (Democrat), of New York, as spokesman for a party of United States Senators, today declared Great Britain "must take the blame for the chaos in the Holy Land" and that the United States Government must take steps in the matter.

Copeland was accompanied by Senator Warren R. Austin (Republican), of Vermont, another member of the party, on the Conte di Savoia. A third member, Senator Daniel O. Hastings (Republican), of Delaware, returned Monday on the Normandie.

The New York Senator explained the investigation of conditions in Palestine was not made in an official capacity, but to acquaint the party with an accurate picture of events.

In State of Terror.

Copeland issued a statement which follows in part:

"We found Palestine in a state of terror. Shootings, bombings and every other form of violence had become part of the daily routine during the past five months. Murder is a common occurrence. Nearly 1,000 lives have been lost in the present turmoil, including those of Arabs, Jews, and British soldiers.

"In spite of the fact that thoughtful Jewish and Arab leaders strive for mutual peace and lasting understanding, the intolerable state of affairs in Palestine continues. It is a condition for which, as we see it, the mandatory government must be held responsible. Its failure in this matter is of concern to the United States.

"Great Britain holds the mandatory power over Palestine. It is charged by the world with responsibility for good government there.

Treaty Is Recalled.

"The United States has a treaty with the British Sovereign, a treaty which includes every word of the original mandate designed to guarantee a Jewish national home in Palestine and to give unfailing justice to the Moslems and other religionists in the land.

"In consequence of this solemn treaty, it is our right and probably our duty, as citizens and as United States Senators, to investigate and report upon the fulfillment of the convention which we believe is not being administered in accordance with its letter and spirit. * * *

"In the last analysis, the British government must take the blame for the chaos in the Holy Land.

"Our own government, however, cannot be held blameless until it calls sharply to the attention of Great Britain our feeling that the mandate is not being administered as it should be.

"No matter how pressing may be the demands of a Presidential election, time out must be taken to have the atrocities of Palestine stopped. We cannot shed our own responsibility until we remind Great Britain of its neglected duty and insist upon its performance. * * *"

D. C. Data to Show Costs Due to U. S.

A far-reaching report on the cost of street and bridge construction and the loss of revenue because of the Federal Government's immunity from gasoline tax is being prepared by the District Highway Department for the fiscal relations committee, now making a study.

To be incorporated in a comprehensive report being drafted by practically all municipal departments, the highway data will cover the expenditures of the last 11 years, the entire period of the gasoline tax.

Besides calling attention to the wider streets and the more expensive bridges necessitated by the presence of the seat of the National Government, the highway report will include estimates of what paving on streets adjacent to Federal buildings would cost private property owners.

U. S. Army Band to Give Final Outdoor Concert

Under the direction of Capt. Thomas F. Darcy, jr., the United States Army Band will give its last outdoor concert of the season at 7:30 tonight on the east steps of the Capitol. The "Thank You" program, presented in appreciation of the public interest during the summer, will consist of compositions which have been accorded the heaviest applause at previous concerts.

Among the numbers to be played are "Headlines" by Carleton Colby, a contemporary work descriptive of hurried modern life; "An Appeal to the Great Spirit," an impression of the Indian praying to Manitou; Lake's popular "Evolution of Dixie" and Sousa's "Showing Off Before Company," in which each section of the band has a solo part.

CHAPTER XVIII.

Geddes Out of Town.

Ellen now imposed on more of the firm's time by copying the typed letter on a piece of handsome note paper with the gold fountain pen given her on her last birthday by John Schyler Van Druten IV., of Tarrytown, N. Y.

Just as she was signing her name the outside office phone rang. One of Ellen's duties was to answer the phone. This she always did in a tone of voice both gracious and businesslike.

"Geddes, Hilton and Geddes."

A masculine voice, sounding as English and distinguished as Mallard's own, said curtly: "I should like to make an appointment with Mr. Gordon Geddes."

"I'm sorry, but Mr. Geddes is out of town at present."

"O!" said the voice with unmistakable impatience, and snapped out, "When will he be back?"

Ellen replied with heavy dignity that Mr. Geddes was not expected back in the office till the latter part of March. "If you care to leave your name and address I'll make a note of it and will be glad to inform you as soon as Mr. Geddes gets back."

"My name's Chetwyn. But I'll not trouble you. I'll call up again toward the end of next month." And Ellen thought she heard him say "Damn it!" to some one as he hung up the phone.

She had scarcely returned from mailing her letter and book at the postoffice and was settling down to real work when the door opened and David Barkley walked in. His scornful demeanor, induced by a glance at the leather chairs arranged in a row about the room and at the setter dogs in frames on the walls, changed to one of satisfaction to find his Cinderella unattended save by a typewriter behind a small fence of golden oak.

He leaned over this confidentially, saying: "Is justice in a favorable mood today?"

"Good morning," Ellen replied. "Please state your business."

"Well, I'm interested in taking the boss' stenog out to lunch."

The noon whistles would be blowing in about ten minutes. As Ellen had set out to prove to her world in the East that she could earn her own living and live on it unaided by paternal allowances, and as she had just spent the last $2 of her half month's stipend for a volume of poems, she was not averse to the prospect of a free meal.

Luncheon was served in a sunny flagged patio, roofed over with rust-colored awnings and pepper tree branches.

David seated Ellen at a table for two near a tinkling fountain, conscious the while of admiring eyes fixed upon them. He thought Ellen was a knockout in a tawny brown knitted suit that looked like those his sister indulged in, the bills for which always brought forth rumbles of objections from dad. He wondered how a poor little working girl like Ellen could acquire such garments, and if it had been any one else he would have suspected her boss.

Asks About Villa.

"How's everything going at Villa Far Niente?" Ellen asked. "Tell me quick—how's Mr. Mallard?"

"Do you think even the lowest gold digger would let a fellow buy food for her just to get him to talk about his rival?"

"Experience has taught me——"

"Rather than hear any more about those teachings I'll talk. Answer to question No. 1: We're boarding Aladdin and his wonderful lamp up at Villa Far Niente—much to the joy of all the environs. He spends most of his time lolling in the sun on his balcony, thinking up ways and means of spending money. He has our conscientious Pam on the hip. She dare not raise objections because his largesse is providing long-needed bread and butter for most of her pet down-and-outs, besides giving him such a kick.

"That starving carpenter she's been breaking her heart over now has a job remodeling the old brick stable. It's going to be transformed into the niftiest oak and chromium boudoir for two Kentucky thoroughbreds to be seen outside the bluegrass. It seems one of these horses belonged to the late William Grimwold, and nothing is too good for him. When Aladdin and Pam aren't riding over the hills together it has been intimated that me and my gal can take our pick."

"Well, go on."

"Our boarder's next move was to invest so lavishly in the stock of the communistic nurseryman down in the valley that the fellow's quit gabbing about the redistribution of wealth.

"It seems Mallard's Jap is an authority on Japanese gardens, and the two of them propose to build one with their own hands. They are going to reclaim the unsightly patch of ground beyond the bamboo hedge at the foot of the garden where the Wyeth funds ran out. All the indigents of the hill country are being employed to put the swimming pool and tennis courts in order. It seems Aladdin plays a wicked game of tennis——"

"I think it's perfectly wonderful!" Ellen broke in, starry-eyed.

"It will be if a certain little shut-in I know of will come up for a breath of country air next Sunday to look it over."

"Figuring to give the stenographer a treat, are you? Thanks, I'll come," said Ellen promptly. "How is Mr. Mallard?"

"O, gosh! Can't we change the subject? Mallard is recovering so rapidly that, through the teachings of experience, I'm persuaded his indisposition was caused by a bottle."

"You would think that!"

"Well, he hasn't given me many chances to form new opinions. Keeps to himself. Even meetings at meals have been rare. At which time he varies a silent and rude sort of preoccupation with such a keen penetration he embarrasses even a quick thinking fellow by grabbing off your remarks scarcely before they've been hatched . . . One catches glimpses of him half an acre away down the garden with his Jap and the cat. Shadow, who has a bigger crush on him than anybody and follows him about like a dog. The ladies would be distressed at the poor figure he cuts, stripped to the waist, wielding a hoe and spade, and covered with garden muck and sweat. And can he concentrate! I've seen that Jap run clear across the terrace to get him separated from his shovel long enough to take note of the musical cadences of the luncheon gong. You'll be sorry to hear that in my opinion the Wyeth confirmed spinster is falling for him."

"Of course she is! Who doesn't?" Ellen ejaculated.

"Well, somehow or other, I've got to find out the secret of his power. Pam's already started. She's having him down on her hearthstone nightly. They make quite a domestic picture glimpsed from the hall. And our hero reading aloud. He can do that for a fare-you-well."

"What does he read?"

"I heard rhythms that sounded like Francis Thompson."

"O—has he got one of those? What poem was he reading?"

"Something about black tents and red pavilions. When I peeked through the door Pam was bestowing a heartfelt look on the fire, and what his eyes were bestowing on her averted face—I believe that's how it would be expressed—was nobody's business."

"Gracious! I've got to get back to the office—15 minutes late. I've had a lovely luncheon, David. I can hardly wait till Sunday!"

Richman and Merrill Hope to Take Off Today

Musgrave Harbor, Newfoundland, Sept. 17 (Canadian Press).—Harry Richman and his pilot Dick Merrill tonight hoped to resume tomorrow noon their interrupted London-to-New York flight.

The fliers prevented by shortage of fuel from reaching their New York destination, said they hoped to have the big $100,000 monoplane towed to the beach where they could take off for Harbor Grace to refuel before hopping to New York tomorrow noon.

Woman Among 4 Held in Train Plot

The four, Mrs. Edith Buckmaster West, her brother, Albert Buckmaster, and Wayne and Norman Hartley, brothers, confessed after their arrest Saturday, County Prosecutor Russell Lyons said.

Salute to Flag Is Up to Courts, O'Conor Holds

Baltimore, Sept. 17 (AP).—Attorney General Herbert R. O'Conor ruled today the legality of the Maryland flag-salute regulation was a matter for the courts to decide.

O'Conor ruled that the State Board of Education had no right to review a previous decision by the Prince Georges County Board of Education. The county board upheld the principal of the Oxon Hill school in barring a number of children because they refused to salute the flag.

"In my opinion," O'Conor said, "the question presented by the petition in this case involved fundamental constitutional rights, and goes beyond a mere matter of administration. The legislature could hardly have intended to make final a decision of a purely administrative tribunal in a matter of this kind * * * It follows that in my opinion your board has no authority to decide the legal question presented."

Board Asked Ruling.

The State board asked the Attorney General to rule in the case after receiving a petition from an attorney representing the barred children. The petition was sent to O'Conor.

The attorney general recited a number of court decisions which bore on the case and said these "lay down a rule that cases involving only proper administration of the school system may be reviewed by the State board, but cases involving purely legal questions are beyond the board's authority. The courts have jurisdiction to pass on such questions, the remedy being by mandamus."

The petition was filed by August A. Ludke through Attorney Edmund D. Campbell, of Obear, Morgan & Campbell, Washington, D. C. Ludke said his six children, ranging from 7 to 14 years, are members of a religious sect called Jehovah's Witnesses. They believe, he said, "that if they follow the teachings of God * * * they cannot salute the flag of any civil or secular government."

Sent Home by Principal.

The petition said William T. Jobe, principal of the Oxon Hill School, refused to allow the children to enter school unless they promised to salute the flag daily. They declined and Jobe sent them home.

The flag salute was required under an act of the 1918 Legislature which says that "it shall be the duty of said boards of education to prepare for the use of the public schools of the State a program providing for the salute to the flag. * * *"

Ludke, a former service man, said the religious reason is the only cause of the children's refusal to salute the flag and that they "are loyal and devoted to the principles of free government and of democracy. * * *"

Cardinal Hayes Warns of Rise Of Communism

Declares Nation May Have to Fight Marxism in Civil War.

By the United Press.

New York, Sept. 17.—Patrick Cardinal Hayes, carrying on in America the Vatican's denunciation of communism, today said the United States may have to fight communism in a civil war some day to keep its present form of government.

Hayes spoke of a "world embattled" because of communism, in an address from the pulpit of St. Patrick's Cathedral to delegates of the third annual national convention of the Holy Name Society, and predicted that "we may have to battle here in America for the flag that flies over our heads."

"The word 'patriotism' seems to be an obsolete word just now in our own country," the 68-year-old cardinal said. "Rarely do we see it. Rarely do we hear it. We are informed that even in our schools and our colleges and our universities, instead of patriotism, we hear communism.

"Imagine America trying to keep from its citizens the word 'patriotism.' The holy father in his letter says, 'Rally them to the defense of the sacred interests of true religion and of true patriotism'—God and country, of course.

"Today we are a world in battle, a battle against atheism in Russia, sacrilege in Spain, a Catholic country, and apostasy in Mexico, another Catholic country. It is a serious situation. When I was a boy, we were taught to have such reverence for the flag. Now it is a struggle among the children to get them to respect the flag."

Commenting on a letter sent by Cardinal Pacelli, secretary of state for the Vatican, Hayes said, "You are called in a special manner to inspire the faithful in the noblest ideals of service to God and to country." He promised that "America will never find the Catholic church an enemy, never find the Catholic church undermining, destroying the government."

Mme. Bilmanis Arrives to Start Busy Round of Activities.

Wife of Envoy Plans Study of English as First Duty.

By Marylyn Reeve.

"I do not speak English, BUT—I must learn——" thus spoke (without the trace of an accent) Mme. Bilmanis, who has just arrived in Washington to join her husband, the Minister of Latvia. She is of medium height, and has softly waved auburn hair. Her smile is gracious and merry and her blue eyes follow with interest everything going on about her. She speaks, in addition to her native tongue, German, Polish, Russian and French.

On this her first visit to the United States, Mme. Bilmanis said she was fascinated by the skyscrapers of New York. Although in Washington only two days she has been completely charmed by the Capital and considers it the most "individual" city she has ever visited.

Dr. Bilmanis is musical, and so is his wife. He delights in playing his grand piano while a group of friends sits around, with one or perhaps all joining in familiar songs. Now, with the lady of the house a harpist, there will no doubt be many musical evenings at the Massachusetts avenue legation.

By now Dr. Bilmanis has shown his wife much of Washington. They have made a round of all of the large buildings, starting with the White House. From their own tea balcony there is a glimpse of the Monument. The Minister, who is quite an artist and enjoys keenly a beautiful picture whether painted or out of doors, discovered the view and had the trees in the garden trimmed so that the tall memorial shaft is seen in the very center of a leafy frame.

Even when Mme. Bilmanis does "settle down" after the first two or three weeks in her home, there will be a dearth of free moments for there are the embassies and legations where wives' calls must be made, not to mention the ranking ladies of United States officialdom.

Sometime in the coming year Dr. Bilmanis and his wife will be joined by his sister, Miss Emily Bilmanis, and their niece, Miss Vera Bilmanis, who will visit in Washington.

Mme. Bilmanis will make her bow in Washington society at the reception to be given Sunday by the Minister of Siam and Mme. Rajamaitri, and will be hostess at dinner for the first time here on September 30, when she and her husband will entertain in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Earl Packer, who will shortly leave for Riga, Latvia, where Mr. Packer will assume his duties as First Secretary.

The Washington Scene

By the Poe Sisters.

Mercy knows no politics and it is a fact evidenced this week in Washington with persons of all political faiths gathered in one common purpose about the council tables of the conference for the 1936 mobilization for human needs.

Two of Ohio's foremost political figures, former Secretary of War Newton D. Baker, and Charles P. Taft 2d, son of a Republican President, sat elbow to elbow at the conference deliberations. Nearby was Rear Admiral Cary T. Grayson, chairman of the American Red Cross, and closely affiliated with the Wilson Administration as White House physician. Dr. Grayson remembered Charlie Taft as a bright-eyed little boy, for he first went to the White House as physician when Taft was President. Washington also renewed acquaintance with another delegate, Mrs. Frederick M. Paist, of Wayne, Pa., a vice chairman of Mrs. Roosevelt's national women's committee. Mrs. Paist is the sister of former Secretary of the Navy Curtis D. Wilbur, and of Mr. Ray Lyman Wilbur, Secretary of the Interior in the Cabinet of President Hoover.

During the 12 years of the Republican regime here, Mrs. Paist was a visitor to Washington while her brothers and their families spent nearly all their vacations at her home in Wayne.

"All work and no play" appears to be the slogan of the conference, for except for the business luncheons and dinners, those attending it are avoiding social engagements of any kind. They came here for two days of hard work and not even quiet teas with friends are on their schedule.

Roddy, the big white and tan English setter belonging to Col. and Mrs. James C. Magee, U. S. A., Medical Corps, at Walter Reed Hospital, almost outdid Mary's little lamb on Wednesday morning, for he followed his mistress not to school but to the door of the chapel and appeared in the doorway to watch the wedding of Miss Mary E. Donnelly to Lieut. Col. William Meehan.

Watchful members of the Army guard of honor led the protesting Roddy away from the church door and he watched for his owners at a respectful distance from the ceremonies.

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

After Nursing Sickly Pup Back to Health, Woman Cannot Afford to Keep It; Seeks Good Care for It.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Two years and eight months ago I was working in a local newspaper office when a newsboy brought me a sickly, frightened, dirty mongrel pup. Having a liking for dogs, I kept her. By doctoring and constant attention during the next two months, I nursed her into a healthy pup. She is an intelligent animal and as my husband worked nights, she was not only company but a good watch dog.

• • • •

A little over a year ago I resigned my job. A few weeks later my husband and I separated. I got another job paying a much smaller salary. I could not keep the dog where I was boarding, so I had her picture run in a local newspaper, offering her to anyone who would give her a good home, but those who came and liked her would not take her because of her sex.

• • • •

One day I came home from work to find her missing. After scouring the streets I stopped to inquire at the Pound and there she was, caged with a number of other dogs. The Poundmaster told me quite a few persons come to him for dogs, so I let her stay there a week, but to no avail. After a week or two, if no one claims such dogs, they are put to death, so naturally I paid the fee and had her released.

• • • •

Next I took her to the Animal Rescue League, but brought her away immediately, as they keep only pedigreed male dogs and these only for a short time. Then I took her to a dog kennel, where I have boarded her the past year. To do so, I had to practice great economy, foregoing concerts, motion pictures, finger waves, etc. Now the rate has gone up and I can't afford to keep her there longer. In fact, I never could afford it, but the only alternative was to put the dog to death or abandon her, and I couldn't do either of these.

• • • •

But what am I to do? If only someone would adopt her. I will be glad to pay for the tag and ship her prepaid. If I had a permanent, good-paying job and thought I might some day have a home of my own, I would try to keep the dog, but the future is so uncertain that I cannot count on that. Maybe I am crazy for liking a dog so much, but I just can't have her put to death. After all, she didn't ask to be born any more than I did, and poor thing, her sex is against her. What to do about it? Please suggest something. Very sincerely yours,

DOROTHY C.

• • • •

DEAR DOROTHY C.: It would appear that you had left no stone unturned in your efforts to provide the dog a good home and devoted care. I have no suggestions to add to those you have already tried. It is just possible the publication of your letter here will so interest someone in the case that a home will be made for the dog, despite her unfortunate gender. There may be persons who would consider you crazy for being so compassionately devoted to a dog; but there are an equal number of others, no doubt, who will comprehend and champion your sentiment.

Problem of Education.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: My aunt came to this country from Eastern Europe when she was a very young girl. Her formal education is equivalent to that of a 9-year-old child. Now she is in her middle fifties and at last, after years of hard work, has leisure in which to read and study and correct her deficiencies of knowledge.

• • • •

I have tried to teach her a little myself, but her mind is stiff and tired and her memory slow. I am an inept teacher and we have made little progress. Her need is for an adult class where she can, in a reasonable time, learn spelling and writing and master an outline of geography, history, grammar and literature. In other words, not a complete education, but a background sufficient to prevent embarrassment in ordinary discourse and to open her mental windows.

• • • •

Do you know of such a class or of a prescribed course of study suitable for her? Do you know of a general textbook I might follow in coaching her? Any advice you may have to offer will be genuinely appreciated. I am singularly helpless and know of no other way to solve this problem. As you can see, it is important. Sincerely.

CONSTANCE.

• • • •

DEAR CONSTANCE: I am told the Webster Americanization School, at Tenth and H streets northwest, conducts a program of adult education expressly designed to meet the needs of just such persons as your aunt. The school has an average enrollment of some 2,000 students, both foreign and American born, and there are daytime and evening classes, to accommodate all types of workers.

• • • •

The fall term opens Monday, September 21, and registrations are being conducted today and tomorrow morning, September 18 and 19, from 9 until 11 a. m. I suggest you take your aunt to the school, to the office of Miss Maude Alton, principal, who will be in charge of registration. She will be given a card of admission to the school, and advised in charting her course of study.

• • • •

As an alternative to enrolling in this school, your aunt may study with a private tutor. I can give you the name of such a person, whom I believe to be particularly well qualified to teach your aunt, if you prefer.

M. H.

Directoire Tendency.

Paris (U.P.).—The Directoire tendency is seen in some customes with high collars and broad revers. Fur is used attractively here for detachable boleros, for yokes and sleeves, tops and fur vests. The fur frequently makes a startling color contrast to the coat itself as when beaver brown is used on olive green, white ermine on black or seal on apricot wool.

Black Touches for Light Frock

Black continues to dominate the color chart, but have you thought of its possibilities as an accent theme? It gives a finishing touch the lovely tunic afternoon frock of pecan beige above. The dull black velvet gilet sets the tempo for the hat, gloves, belt and shoes resulting in a smart and individual ensemble. Light colors such as beige and gray gain dash by the use in trimming of shiny black and a softening effect by the use of dull suedes and velvets.

Girl Presents Odd Problem In Etiquette

Her Letter Raises Question of Relations With Family of Former Suitor.

By Margaret Wallace.

A WASHINGTON girl who wants to be friendly with her former fiance's family sends us an unusual etiquette problem. No doubt many another woman is just as puzzled over the status of friendship between her and the family of the young man she was once pledged to marry. Her letter speaks for itself.

DEAR MISS WALLACE: I have just broken my engagement with a man whose family I love very dearly. I wish to continue my relationship with them, send them gifts, invite them to luncheon and dinner and go to the movies with them. I have always given his mother a gift on her birthday which will be next week. She has always expected me to bring the gift myself. She is an invalid and always had tea for me on her birthday afternoon.

Do you think it would look as if I were trying to court the young man again if I carried on my former friendly relations with his relatives? I am engaged to another man. My former fiance is not in Washington. I feel that his relatives like me and would like to see me.

It really depends on the attitude of the relatives. If they are willing, and show a desire to continue your friendship, there is no reason why you should not act as you always did with them. I would send the gift to the mother, or call her up and tell her you wish to bring it. I would not arrive at the home of a mother of an ex-fiance uninvited and bearing gifts. You can send a little note inviting the other members of the family to luncheon or dinner, or the movies, as you desire. They will soon indicate to you whether they wish to continue the friendship, as they have the privilege of accepting or declining your invitations in writing.

Today's HEALTH TALK

Antics of the Sciatic Nerve.

The sciatic—with its branches—is the longest nerve of the body. It travels from the lower spine to the region of the hip and down the back of the leg. It is in danger, therefore, of injury from pressure or as a result of infection. In fact, a catalogue of the many points of possible interference would fill a printed page.

Unfortunately symptoms are not distinctive, which means that the hunt for the cause of pain may be long and discouraging. In the majority of instances trouble that appears in the sciatic may not mean disease of the nerve at all. It does indicate, however, that something has happened in the neighborhood of a part of this important structure. We must realize then that sciatica, as it is called, is not a real disease, but an evidence of a general or a local disorder.

As a rule the onset is gradual. In walking the patient flexes the leg at the hip—that is, he carries it toward the body; and when lying down the same position is assumed. On standing, the sufferer supports himself on the healthy leg, which means that the spinal column is frequently bent as a result of a long, continued abnormal posture.

Pain May Be Constant.

The pain may be constant or spasmodic. Sometimes it is aggravated by movement, by coughing or sneezing, or by the position of the body. It is felt in the part supplied by the nerve and as a rule extends along the back of the thigh, then to the leg and the foot. In many cases it spreads to the groin and the front of the thigh. If there is a growth causing pressure inside the pelvis (the bony hip girdle) the symptoms may be observed on both sides of the body. Usually, however, pain is confined to one thigh and is described as a gnawing or burning sensation which is frequently worse at night.

Numbness and tingling often occur. Now and then there is a history of injury followed by a pain in the back which later creeps downward to the thigh, leg or ankle. If the distress is equally severe on both sides of the body disease of the spinal cord—for example, a tumor—should be considered.

Cause Is Sought.

In arriving at a diagnosis the physician thinks first of general diseases that may be responsible—diabetes, syphilis and gout; then of a possible inflammation of the nerve (neuritis) that may follow the prolonged use of alcohol or the absorption of some poison such as lead. Arthritis involving the bones and joints of the lower back can simulate all the symptoms of sciatica.

One of the chief sources of the malady is a focal infection and a careful search should be made for abscessed teeth, diseased tonsils or sinuses that harbor pus, etc. Numerous cases have been reported in which the removal of a single diseased tooth has relieved the condition.

Force Policy With Children Often Fails

Parents, However, Should Be Ready to Form Decisions.

By Alice Clarissa Richmond.

AT BED-TIME Johnny refused to go to bed, although he was obviously exhausted. He stood stock still apparently unable to move, making no response to his mother's arguments and commands.

Fortunately, his mother was patient and when appeals to logic had failed she took him camly by the hand and led him to his room. To her surprise he made no effort to resist, but sibumitted quietly.

Many mothers would have thought Johnny stubborn, but Johnny's mother realized that Johnny was tired and tense and that he could not make the choice to obey. As soon as she took the decision into her own hands and spared him the effort of will required to move him from his toys to bed, Johnny relaxed and gratefully obeyed. If his mother had forced him to decide for himself in his exhausted condition, Johnny might have had a "tantrum" and he would certainly have resented his mother's action.

There are many situations where it is advisable or necessary to make a child decide for himself; but where the child seems paralyzed, when the choice is put up to him, he is most mercifullly treated when the choice is taken out of his hands. Even an adult may at times find himself in this position, and welcome anyone who will not only tell him what to do, but will make him do it.

Some mothers, not sensing the situation, make a scene by forcing the issue and so bringing the child to the breaking point of exhaustion. Decision and a sense of security are what the tired child most needs, and for the moment training in obedience must be set aside.

Even sympathy is unnecessary, and may only bring on a flood of tears verging on hysteria. The mother's attitude should suggest rest and unconcern.

A WOMAN'S NEW YORK

By Alice Hughes.

I AM CONSTANTLY amazed at the way our sporty youngsters will go for absolutely any press stunt thought up by an inspired publicity man. All the boys and girls with good society page names seem to to want is a good time and plenty of free bubble water.

LILY PONS.

The able Sherman Billingsley, who runs the popular Stork Club, and the Streets of Paris at Coney Island collaborated on such a feat a few nights ago. Boniface Billingsley loaded 60 society kids into two buses and turned them loose at Coney, each with a fistful of tickets. Society chatterers all gave the story a good break the next day, using all the young bloods' names that looked good in print.

An East Fifty-ninth street unit of one of the country's leading popular-priced restaurant chains did even better not long ago. It fomented a cocktail party with Prince and Princess Paul Chavchavadze as hosts, and if you can pronounce that you can have it! Here they all were, nibbling cocktails on the house—the Princess Ketto Mikeladze (in the dress business), the Count and Countess de Forceville (she handles publicity for one of the smartest shops) and the Grand Duchess Marie, also in trade.

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—One of New York's odd and interesting highways — Grand street between the Bowery and Chrystie street, heart of the Lower East Side. Every shop in the block is devoted to the sale of bridal toggery! All the blushing brides-to-be of the East Side flock to Grand street to get fitted out for the fateful march to the altar! . . . Gladys Parker, our famous pint-sized dress-designer and cartoonist, says she has deserted dresses forever and will wear pajamas. It's a sight to see tiny Gladys, with her flaming thatch and lips to match, going down the street in her trousers. Gladys, who originated "Flapper Fanny," is now doing a new syndicated picture strip. Her 6-foot spouse is also a cartoonist . . .

Lily Pons writes from Hollywood that she faces a hectic year of trilling. When she gets back home after finishing her second movie, she goes right to work on the radio again. On November 28 she makes her Chicago opera debut in good old "Lakme" — getting $2,500 for the chore. At the Met, next winter, she will sing "Coq D'Or" for the first time. April will be devoted entirely to concerts, and in June she will make her fourth trip to the opera in Buenos Aires. Lily's first concert date will be in St. Louis on December 2. And gosh, how the money rolls in! . . . Lily also says that her next summer's single may be Noel Coward's "Conversation Piece," in which Yvonne Printemps appeared on Broadway . . .

The ebullient Thyra Samter Winslow, author of some of the finest American short stories, and the gift of Fort Smith, Ark., to the lit'ry mob, has left us flat for Hollywood, where she's now adapting a Katherine Brush story for Kay Francis. Thyra wrote "She Married Her Boss," in which Claudette Colbert starred.

Down in the Cumberland Mountains of Tennessee, women are busily making interesting things which are sold at the Southern Highlanders Shop in Rockefeller Center. Dropping in there the other day I saw lacquered boutonnieres made of pinecones which look grand on fall suits.

The shop also sells decorated teasugars made by students at Berea College, Kentucky. Made in sets of 16, the sugar cubes are decorated with monograms or club or sorority emblems. The designs float to the top of the cup when the sugar begins to melt, practically guaranteeing squeals of "How ducky!" from your guests. Interesting place, this shop, and doing a great job, too.

A. F. G. E. Outlook.

Now that most of the District delegates to the A. F. G. E. convention in Detroit are back at their desks and the excitement of the convention has worn off, it should be possible to weigh the internal situation in the federation a bit more judiciously.

Fortunately, the first step toward clearing the atmosphere has been taken by both the A. F. G. E. executive council and the American Federation of Labor in the decision to appoint one representative from each body to conduct a "thorough investigation of the practicability of bringing about the reaffiliation or reorganization and organization of new lodges" in the five ousted units.

A. F. of L. officials are disturbed at the extremist attitude that has been adopted by some of the District conservative leaders and the restraining hand of George Googe, A. F. of L. "trouble shooter," was quite busy at the convention. One effort to amend the constitution to make the membership of lodges in central labor bodies permissive instead of mandatory, as required by the A. F. of L., brought a sharp veto. Googe also is known to have curbed the desire of some of the more extremist leaders to oust the liberal lodges with permanent charters, as well as those with temporary certificates.

Whether A. F. G. E. conservatives would have been permitted to go as far as they did in amending the constitution, might have had a different answer had the A. F. of L. not been so determined to stave off any attempt to reelect former President E. Claude Babcock. Fearing that liberals might swing their bloc of votes to Babcock, Googe acquiesced—silently if not actively—in the formation of a united front of members of the executive council and assisted them, while in the chair, to force their program through.

Whether the future is to bring a healing of the rift in the A. F. G. E., or the further expulsion or withdrawal of "progressive" units, will depend in good part on the results of the investigation voted by the convention and the concessions that both sides must make to achieve a unity of purpose.

On certain points—the pursuing of a constructive legislative program that will ease some of the basic causes for friction in the organization—there should be no difficulty. The convention has gone on record favoring the creation of a civil service court of appeals. If such an agency existed when the eight fingerprint employes were fired by the Department of Justice the mess that followed probably could have been avoided.

Similarly with the extension of civil service to all Government employes and of classification to the field, both proposals included in the legislative program adopted by the convention, the friction between non-civil and merit agencies and between field and District lodges could be eased.

Tactics.

Of greater difficulty, however, is the question of changing the tactics of both groups—if harmony is to prevail.

On the "progressive" side there must be a clear understanding of the difference between a workers union and an organization of Government employes, between working for a private concern whose motive for existence is financial profit and for Uncle Sam whose job is to serve the public.

One great mistake of the "progressives" has been to identify militant action with the labor movement. The result has been to exaggerate efforts to adjust grievances, in many cases so minor as to be trifling, into major battles of principle. In this respect the tactics of the "progressives" have been as disruptive of democracy as have been the arbitary parliamentary methods of the conservatives. No organization can function in democratic fashion if every single resolution of suggestion is to be argued and fought on a "do or die" basis.

Of course, in this respect conservatives have been as guilty as the "progressives." The whole trouble with the A. F. G. E. can be boiled down to the fact that the lodges have split into two solid blocs, and from the moment a District department meeting or convention opens to its close, the blocs battle one another on every issue that comes up and regardless of the merits vote against one another.

The finger of blame cannot be pointed to either of the two factions, no more than it is possible to say who pushed whom in a crowded subway train. Extremes breed extremes. Conservatives excuse the rigors of the new constitutional amendments because of the "wildness" of the progressive tactics.

Yet precisely those amendments and arbitrary rulings are the things that make the progressives wilder by the minute. Both factions seem to have forgotten that compromise is the essence of democracy.

Making Peace.

In his acceptance speech, Col. Stengle declared "the war is over." No doubt the colonel meant what he said. But, as everyone knows, no war is over until a just peace is written.

Conservative leaders can renew the war by writing a peace treaty of Versailles bitterness. In a sense that is what they have done in rewriting the constitution as they have. And yet it is not too late for conciliation—or at least to take the first step in what must be a long and tedious task of undoing all the damage that has been done.

It is time for the conservatives to show that they can be charitable as well as stern. Specifically, we are referring to the amendment pending in the District Department giving the Department the power to expel any lodge delegate deemed objectionable to a two-thirds majority of the Department. With the certificates of the temporary lodges revoked, conservatives will have no difficulty in putting into effect the amendment.

But to what purpose? There is nothing that the amendment could accomplish that the Washington members of the executive council cannot do now with the new constitution. The only effect of insisting upon the passage of this amendment would be to rub salt into old wounds.

Gas Company Asks to Buy Two Others

The Washington Gas Light Co. late yesterday formally asked permission of the Public Utilities Commission to buy the Alexandria Gas Co. and the Washington Suburban Gas Co. of Hyattsville, from the Washington & Suburban Companies for an amount not in excess of $1,375,000.

The Washington company proposes to obtain bank loans to negotiate the deal, but plans to ask commission approval subsequently for the issuance of new stock. Its officials estimate the investment will net about 6½ per cent besides offering an opportunity for expansion in conjunction with the city.

Filing of the application followed an all-day conference between the commission and gas company officials and a representative of Stone & Webster, which appeared for Washington & Suburban Companies.

Notice of Hearing.

Richmond B. Keech, vice chairman of the commission, said a tenday notice of a public hearing probably will be issued by the commission today.

Three major questions will occupy the commission at the hearing, he indicated. They are: (1) Whether either or both of the suburban companies should be bought by the Washington company; (2) if the purchase is desirable what price should be paid; and (3) what will be the effect of the deal on the financial condition of the Washington company and subsequently local consumers.

Application for the purchase is an outgrowth of the action of the Washington & Suburban Companies, a Massachusetts common law trust, in registering its 130,000 shares, representing a controlling interest, in the Washington Gas Light Co. The holding company, which is expected to be dissolved, also will place its other properties on the market.

Marcy L. Sperry, president of the Washington company, in the petition states that the proposed purchase price exceeds by $175,000 the notes and advances outstanding, together with accrued interest, of the suburban concerns, wholly apart from the value of the stock.

2,500 Shares of Stock.

The Alexandria Gas Co., the petition set forth, has 2,500 shares of outstanding capital stock of no par value, with notes and advances outstanding as of August 31, last, of $803,320, and accrued interest of $249,465.08.

The Hyattsville company has 8,600 shares of capital stock, likewise of no par value, with a 6½ per cent first mortgage gold bonds of $231,000 and notes and advances of $271,928.37.

Three reasons were given by the Washington company in support of its petition. They are:

(1) The territories of Alexandria and Hyattsville are contiguous to the area now served by the Washington company and its subsidiaries, and because of the growing congestion in Washington the company must look "more and more to suburban territory for the growth and development of its gas business."

One Local Management.

(2) Acquisition of the suburban companies will "result in a fully integrated gas system serving the metropolitan area of the District under one local management, without foreign holding company ownership or control."

(3) The deal will not adversely affect the interests of Washington consumers, "whereas if these properties are not acquired by Washington the consumers in the District may be eventually adversely affected by limitation upon the growth of the system by which they are served with gas."

The expansion, the company adds, will insure "the eventual maximum economies in furnishing gas service both within and without the District that may be realized from large-scale operations."

No dividends have been paid on the capital stock of the Alexandria company, but dividends have been paid quarterly on the capital stock of the Hyattsville concern.

'Hurricane' Fails to Stop Boats In Washington Model Regatta

Despite the light squall that blew across the Capital Plaza pool yesterday, the Department of Playgrounds' annual model boat regatta was successful and none of the contesting boats was reported seriously damaged. The boats were judged on performance and appearance in classes including sailboats, motor boats and home-made boats of any style. The crafts were lined along the side of the pools, held to their moorings by their proud owners, and judged for appearance. Then, at a given signal the boats were released to race to the other side of the pool.

Sailboats set with the correct curve of the keel negotiated the treacherous crossing in a comparatively short time, but a few were caught in the swirling waves and whirled in circles. Two sunk, but before they could damage other crafts from their submerged position, their owners discarded shoes and stockings and waded out to raise them to water level.

Oil Apparatus.

One youngster had a small compartment in his boat that would release oil to quiet the waves, but through some faulty construction of valves it failed to work.

Winners of first, second and third places were awarded Department of Playground blue, red and white ribbons. The winners follow:

District Refuge Lacks Facilities For All Inmates

The work of the District Training School at Laurel, Md., is being seriously hampered through lack of funds. This is the third in a series of articles on the school.

By Ed Fenton.

The old adage "out of sight, out of mind," seems to apply literally to the District Training School, built more than a decade ago to care for the city's feeble-minded and since then, to all purposes, forgotten.

The school is situated three miles east and to the north of Laurel, Md. It occupies 900 acres of land, part of which is given over to a farm, part to residence buildings and part to the ever-active processes of erosion.

Erosion is not the least of the problems with which the institution has to contend. Almost an entire hillside near the residence buildings has been denuded of vegetation. With each rainstorm tons of gravel are washed to the road, blocking all passage until it can be removed.

But more important than that is the desperate need for a hospital at the school.

At the present time the institution is caring for 540 patients. They sleep in wards, 40 of them to a room. When they become ill they must remain in those same wards. There is no other place for them.

About 3 per cent of the patients are definitely tuberculous. Yet there are no isolation facilities for these. They must live with the others and tuberculosis, as Dr. Lewald pointed out, has no chivalry. It will strike without hesitation at those already afflicted with other trouble.

Should a patient be taken with acute appendicitis he cannot be operated on at the institution. He must be driven 25 mies into Washington, part of the way over bumpy, back-country roads.

School facilities, so important to the modern idea of training mental defectives, are sadly lacking. School rooms are scattered through the residence buildings instead of being housed in a single, compact unit. Thus, constant supervision is needed as the patients are taken from one building to another.

Shop work and occupational therapy are vitally necessary in training the patients. Yet lack of funds is handicapping work in this field. With only scanty materials available, the boys in the shop constructed a small foundry. To supply metal for this all the employes at the school save tinfoil from their cigarette packages.

The school farm is one of the major activities at the institution. It provides milk, eggs, pork and vegetables in season.

Board Vetoes Group Raises For Teachers

By a vote of 4 to 3, the Board of Education yesterday refused to blanket 86 vocational teachers into a higher salary level, which would give them an increase of approximately $100 each annually.

At the same time it adopted a report from Dr. Frank W. Ballou ordering the increase to 69 of the teachers on a basis of individual qualifications.

The board's decision was a victory for Dr. Ballou who, in a long-standing controversy among board members, has steadfastly opposed wholesale salary raises for teachers in the vocational schools, which this year, for the first time, are classified not as elementary schools, but as junior high schools.

The board's problem, carried over the summer vacation months, grew out of a new congressional act advancing the status of the vocational schools. One group of board members, led by Henry Gilligan, chairman of the special committee on vocational education, contended that the act automatically raised the teachers' pay to the junior high school scale.

Other members supported Dr. Ballou in the belief that the act empowered and directed the board to "classify" teachers and advance them only as they qualified individually as junior high school teachers.

Henry I. Quinn, board member, charged the act with ambiguity in that it provided in general for salary raises, but specifically charged the board with setting up salary classifications. When the vote came he supported Gilligan's motion to blanket the salary advance. Mrs. Mary McNeil cast the third vote in favor of this motion.

Supporting Ballou were John H. Wilson, member of Gilligan's committee; Robert A. Maurer, Dr. Hayden Johnson and Mrs. Marion Wade Doyle, board president. Mrs. Doyle cast her vote after other members had produced a 3-3 deadlock.

Curran Assails Effort to Use Friendship to Quash Charges

Efforts to quash minor charges through use of "personal friendship" with judges and court attaches were denounced yesterday by Police Court Judge Edward M. Curran as he returned a guilty verdict against Miss Florence Pessagno, of Relay, Md., arraigned on a parking count.

Miss Pessagno was arrested several days ago by Policeman William Sparks, of the Traffic Division, when she allegedly parked in a restricted zone near Seventh and D streets northwest. The charge, however, was nolle prossed, allegedly after intervention of her father, who, it is said, claimed to be a "personal friend" of a Police Court judge.

The woman was recalled to court after a warrant was issued by Corporation Counsel Elwood Seal.

Testifying before Judge Curran yesterday, Policeman Sparks said the woman called him a "damn fool" when he attempted to place a ticket on her car. He charged the woman with disorderly conduct, he said, but the charges were dismissed by another judge. The parking charge never reached court, Sparks added.

Miss Pessagno denied she called the policeman a name, insisting it was to herself she referred. She said her father was reprimanded for telling Sparks of his "personal friendship" with the judge.

Deciding the case, Judge Curran said:

"As sympathetic as this case may be, I find you guilty. There was no necessity for any extra conversation with the policeman, who was only trying to do his duty. I also see no necessity for the statement your father made about being a friend of a judge. Real friends don't say such things. I fine you $3 on the parking charge."

Two Children Hurt by Autos In Washington

Two Washington children were in a critical condition last night after having been struck by automobiles late yesterday.

John B. Tobin, 8, of 316 Anacostia road southeast, suffered a fractured skull, possible internal injuries and multiple cuts and bruises when he was hit by an automobile driven by John R. Pinkett, colored, 47, of the 100 block of V street northwest.

Police were told the youngster, who was taken to Emergency Hospital, was standing beside the automobile of his mother, Mrs. Mary E. Tobin, between E and F streets northwest, when the accident occurred. The driver was not held.

Concussion of the brain, a possible fracture of the skull and cuts and bruises were suffered late yesterday by 6-year-old Charles R. Parks, of 1301 H street northeast, when he was struck by the automobile of Eldred Norwood, 25, of Soldiers' Home.

The driving privileges of 21 out-of-town motorists were suspended yesterday by the revocations board. Two of the permits were revoked.

Thirty-day suspensions—Glenwood Bailey, Chevy Chase, Md., 46 miles; Roy W. Henderson, Marshall, Md., 50 miles; Joseph Myerson, Chevy Chase, Md., 46 miles; Wallace W. Oles, Baltimore, Md., 40 miles; John J. Pearson, Kensington, Md., 44 miles; Vincent Pramonte, University, Va., 48 miles; John Z. Schonhoff, Baltimore, Md., 48 miles.

Early Hearing In Blackmail To Be Sought

Charged with conspiracy to blackmail a prominent Alexandria banker, Mrs. Mary West Krieger, 35-year-old former school teacher, yesterday said she wanted her case to go to trial as soon as possible so that incidents alleged to have occurred in a local rendezvous could be "brought to light."

The woman, who was being held in jail last night, asserted she had been to the rendezvous several times and spent the night. Liquor, she said, is sold freely there, although no license has been obtained from the alcohol control board.

Nervous, following a sleepless night in her cell, Mrs. Krieger assailed her attorney, Samuel Leighton Frooks, New York candidate for Representative at large, for returning to Manhattan without making any effort to obtain her release.

Mrs. Krieger said she had not heard from the lawyer appointed for her in Police Court Wednesday nor had she heard from Frooks, who was charged similarly with the woman in what the district attorney's office termed a "bizarre blackmail attempt."

They are accused of conspiring to blackmail Carroll Pierce, president of the Citizens National Bank of Alexandria. According to Roger Robb, Mrs. Krieger attempted to get money from Pierce on the claim he promised her a job in the bank.

Mrs. Krieger yesterday denounced Pierce and said she was innocent of the blackmail charges.

Terry's Team Is Revenged For 1934

New Yorkers Set Run, Hit Record for Year Against Brooklyn.

By the Associated Press.

Brooklyn, Sept. 17.—Maybe it was because their prospective World's Series opponents were in the stands; or perhaps they were remembering 1934. Anyway, the New York Giants pulled up closer to the National League pennant today by uncovering their heaviest hitting attack of the season to trample their one-time jinx, the Brooklyn Dodgers, 17-3.

While several members of the American League championship cast, the Yankees, took a "busman's holiday" and watched the battle, the Giants walloped five Dodger pitchers for 23 hits and their biggest run-making and base-hitting spree of the year.

The victory, with Garbo Gabler pitching 7-hit ball and Hank Leiber providing a homer with the bases loaded, pulled the Giants five full games in front of the second-place Cardinals, who were idle today.

Historic Remark.

Apparently recalling that the Dodgers blasted the Giants out of the pennant two years ago in the season's final series, after Bill Terry's now historic crack—"Are the Dodgers still in this league"—the New Yorkers got under way from the opening bell today and were never in any danger from the first inning on.

A big seven-run fourth inning, featured by Leiber's round-tripper, was the clincher for the Giants. Before that they had gotten two runs in the first and another in the second on a total of half a dozen doubles.

Every man in the starting line-up, except Mel Ott, whose bat was strangely silent, got into the spirit of the thing, accounting for at least two hits apiece. Dick Bartell contributed four, a double and three singles, while Leiber had a pair of two-baggers as well as his homer, driving in five runs.

Staked to his big lead, Gabler bore down from the fourth on, and allowed but one hit from the fifth through the ninth, for his ninth victory against six defeats.

A fight almost developed in the Dodger third, as Jojo Moore, trying to make a leaping catch of Joe Stripp's long fly, pushed the ball into the stands, but in foul territory. Umpire Magerkurth first ruled it a homer, and then, after the Giants protested, the arbiters went into a huddle and reversed the decision, calling it a foul ball.

Tech in Debut Tonight in Baltimore

By John R. Vosburgh.

Baltimore City College may be a good school of learning, but it's gonna learn a lot more about football tomorrow night if Tech High has anything to say about it. Displaying more wim and wigor than the 1935 Tech team did in its most boisterous moments, the boys from the Northeast have been vowing dire things in store for the city college forces.

A fast 170-pound Tech line coupled with a faster and versatile backfield, although averaging only 148 pounds, will take the field at 8 p. m. under the floodlights of the Johns Hopkins Stadium in Baltimore.

Even Coach Hardell has thrown aside his customary gloom and actually declares that Tech will be stronger this year than it was last season when it had such all-high stalwarts as Francis Crimmins, Francis Preller and Moe Schulman.

The coach, of course, tempered this startling confession with a gentle reminder: "How could we be any worse?"

More optimistic are the 35 assorted youths comprising the Tech squad. From the tiniest third-string substitute to the ablest veteran they are convinced Tech is headed back toward the top of the inter-high heap which place it relinquished last year to Central.

The probable starting line-up and its weight, which Hardell will march on the field is as follows: Ends—Jimmy King (180), and Walter Connolly (150); Tackles—Jake Fleischmann, 200 and Ernest Rawlins (185); guards, Joe Pallas (150); Norris Ball (152); center, Rodrick Clay (170); quarterback—Stanley Wells (138); halfbacks, Kurby Foans (145), and Johnny Williamson (149); fullback—Ludwig Kroutil (160).

Of this crew, only King, Connolly and Wells saw regular service last season. Rawlins saw some action and Kroutil a bit also but the rest are virtually newcomers. Henry Rassier, Jack Belote and Carl Sachs, a trio of fast-improving backs, are among the other backfield men certain to see action. Hardell will use at least two complete teams.

Detroit Victor, Takes Over 3d Place

By the Associated Press.

Detroit, Sept. 17.—Jake Wade, recruit hurler, pitched the Tigers into sole possession of third place in the American League today, stopping the Cleveland Indians with seven hits while his mates were chalking up a 5-to-2 victory.

With the Washington Senators idle, the victory for the Tigers broke a third-place deadlock and dropped the Nats to fourth.

Bitsy Grant Through With Davis Cup Play

By the United Press.

Atlanta, Ga., Sept. 17.—Bryan M. (Bitsy) Grant, diminutive tennis star whose exclusion from Davis Cup competition against Australia this year created a storm of protest, today announced he was through with Davis Cup play.

Rigid training for the Davis play, Grant explained, consumes so much of his time he has been forced to neglect his business.

"I've been gone from the office now for five months," he said. "I just can't see how I could keep up a schedule like that—I'd starve to death."

He emphasized, however, that he planned to continue in tournament competition.

Grant was named to the Davis Cup squad early this year and competed against Mexico. When Australia's team arrived, he received extensive support from fans for an active position on the team.

The Davis Cup team, however, nominated Donald Budge, of California, and Wilmer Allison, of Texas, for the singles and Budge and Gene Mako, of California, for the doubles. The combination was defeated by the Australians, bringing down a storm of criticism on the heads of the Davis Cup committee from fans who believed Grant could have turned the tide.

Miley and Kirkham Advance in Canada

Dixie, Quebec., Sept. 17 (AP).—Two stars from below the border line and pair of Montreal players today shot their way into the semi-final round of the Candian women's golf championship, as form ran true over the royal Montreal course.

Marion Miley, of Lexington, Ky., and Margery Kirkham, the medalist from Montreal, favorites to fight it out for the title won last year by Ada Mackenzie, easily qualified for the round of four along with youthful Marjorie Harrison, of New York, and Mrs. A. B. Darling, of Montreal.

After a faulty outgoing nine in which she finished all-square with Mrs. H. W. Soper, Miss Miley rallied and gave her Montreal opponent a golfing lesson on the five holes of the incoming nine to win, 5 and 4.

Jewish-Italian Star Nines Meet Tonight

With each team primed by a week's intensive training, the Italian and Jewish all-star teams will clash in the Griffith Stadium at 8 o'clock tonight.

According to Manager Sam Scogna and Capt. Eddie Cinotti, the Italian line-up will feature such local standouts as Pepco Barry, Frank Baroni, Carleton Giovanetti, Vic Guazza, jr., and Joe Pusateri.

The Jewish starting roster, while not disclosed by the cagey chieftains, Tank Nitowitz and Phil Sykes, is expected to contain such names as Willie Wolfe, Len Askins, Arnold Heft and Bernie Askins, all of whom have starred in District high school and sandlot ball.

Mound selections for both teams will be kept secret until the opening of the game.

Maryland Looking For Single Guard

One more guard is all Frank Dobson needs to assure Maryland's backfield of good interference during the season, for he has three in the persons of Mike Surgent, a regular last year, Bill Wolf, and Alex Males, a good looking sophomore.

The Terps need another man to stand behind Surgent, who, while a good, dependable running guard, can't be expected to play 60 minutes of all 10 games, it isn't humanly possible. Wolfe and Males can whack up the work on the other side of center, but that won't help Mike.

Wolfe, Pennsylvania Dutchman who has shown steady improvement since coming to Maryland and should be a grade-A lineman before this season is far gone. Short and stocky of build and fast afoot, he has all the physical requirements for the position, and a real football temperament.

Corby Cup to Marion Brown With Brilliant 79 at Columbia

Coming within one stroke of tying the feminine competitive course record, 18-year-olds Marion Brown, of Manor Club, shot the greatest golf of her career yesterday—a 79—to win the Corby Cup in the 18-hole tournament conducted by the Women's District of Columbia Golf Association at Columbia Country Club's course.

Pretty Miss Brown won both the low gross and low net honors, but accepted the latter in view of the fact that the Corby Cup was awarded on a handicap basis.

Her handicap 4, Miss Brown thus finished with a low net of 75.

The Manor miss was only two over women's par, and would have tied the record of 78 owned by Mrs. Elsie Haynes had she not taken a 5 on the home hole. Miss Brown went out in 39 and returned in 40. She started 4—4—4—3, even par, and birdied the tenth.

The low gross prize went to Mrs. Betty Meckley, of Indian Spring—District, Maryland and Middle Atlantic champion—who tallied an 81.

Mrs. R. E. Kelly, of Beaver Dam, with 93—17—7, was runner-up to Miss Brown, and one shot back of her was Mrs. J. A. Marr, of Columbia, with 85—9—77.

Other winners were Mrs. Emery Smith, Chevy Chase, 83—3—78; Mrs. J. W. Beller, Columbia, 87—8—79; Mrs. W. Thomas, Kenwood, 98—18—80, and Mrs. C. L. Vaile, Washington, 97—17—80.

The tournament, first of the fall events on the association schedule, drew a record field of 120.

Tigers, Nats Gain; Chisox Bow, 5-2

Browns Slam Ball and 3-Run Rally in 8th Decides Battle.

By the Associated Press.

St. Louis, Sept. 17.—The seventh-place Browns socked the runner-up White Sox, 5 to 2, today, shaving Chicago's margin over the third-place Tigers to one game as Detroit defeated Cleveland by the same score. The Washington Club, idle, is now a game and a half behind the Chisox.

The speedy Lyn Lary started the run parade in the first, when he beat out a hit and stole second to get into position to advance to third on Julius Solters' fly and and come home when Beau Bell banged out another high one to Mike Kreevich. But it was a 3-run rally in the eighth after two were out that broke a 2-to-2 tie and put the Browns out in front to stay.

West's Hit Brings Run.

In that inning, after Harlond Clift popped to Luke Appling and Solters flied to Kreevich, Bell beat out a bunt down the third base line. Jim Bottomley sent him to second with a single and Sammy West scored Bell with another clean hit. Rollie Hemsley was walked, filling the bases, and when Pinch-hitter Ed Coleman strode to the plate, Relief Pitcher Clint Brown took the place of Monte Stratton.

Coleman came through with a single, scoring Bottomley and West.

A low throw by Tony Piet led to the second Brown run in the third.

Kreevich started the Sox' only scoring inning with a bunt along the third base line. Rosenthal's single sent him to second and he reached third on Zeke Bonura's infield blow.

No-Decision Bouts Due for Braddock

New York, Sept. 17 (AP).—Jimmy Braddock, heavyweight champion, may engage in a series of no-decision bouts this winter in order to tune up for a title defense against Max Schmeling in the summer, his manager, Joe Gould, revealed today as Jimmy returned from Florida where he has been undergoing treatment for arthritis.

Two or possibly three ten-round bouts are planned, Gould said. The first is scheduled to be held in the New Jersey Armory, Jersey City, in January, and the second in the Atlantic City auditorium in February. A third may be staged in Miami in March.

Man to Beat for Amateur Links Title Is Experts' Opinion.

By Paul Mickelson.
Associated Press Sports Writer.

Garden City, N. Y., Sept. 17.—Closeups of the four men who lasted to become semifinalists in the fortieth National Amateur golf championship:

John Goodman—The former caddy from Omaha who beat all the big shot pros out for the National Open championship of 1933 with the doggondest putting spree in the Open's history. Banging at the door for amateur honors for years and beaten only by Lawson Little in last year's semifinal, which found his subpar game worthless. He's the man to beat, say the experts. In fact, many say the title will be decided tomorrow when he meets Johnny Fischer.

Twentysix years old and wiser in the ways of golf, Johnny has altered his game with great results. Stockier and heavier, he's opened the club head a bit, hitting 'em a little shorter, but straighter. His one fault was a terrific hook. Now he actually fades his irons to the green. The old straight blade putter that he used only 51 times for the final 36 holes of the National Open in '33 is in his bag these days. He now uses an aluminum putter with as deadly an effect.

New York Sept. 17 (AP).—Jimmy McLarnin, hard-hitting Cancouver welterweight, and Tony Canzoneri, former lightweight champion, will play a return 10-round engagement in Madison Square Garden, October 2, if the New York State Athletic Commission decides that McLarnin is in good physical condition. Canzoneri outpointed McLarnin in their first clash last May.

Voigt Cuts Finger, but Wins Match, 4 and 3, in Comeback.

By Alan Gould.
Associated Press Sports Editor.

Garden City, N. Y., Sept. 17.—Two youthful American Walker Cup stars, a 42-year-old Metropolitan veteran making a brilliant comeback, and a shot-making son of Scotland emerged today as the semifinalists in the bunkered battle for the United States Amateur golf championship.

Tomorrow, over the 36-hole route on the Garden City Golf Club's historically formidable links, the twin stars of the American Middle West—Omaha's chunky Johnny Goodman and Cincinnati's willowy Johnny Fischer—collide for the first time in the upper half, while Scotland's 25-year-old Jack McLean tackles the seasoned George Voigt, former Washington, D. C., star, in the lower bracket of the tournament draw.

These four survived another day of double-barreled competition marked by the greatest golf played thus far and a minimum of surprises. Voigt sprang perhaps the biggest upset by the thoroughness with which he eliminated Seattle's redoubtable Scotty Campbell, 4 and 3, despite a painfully cut finger, but

Maryland's Major Racing Season Opens at the Graw Today

$2,500 Test Program's Feature

Roman Soldier Entered; Post Time for First Race 2:15 P. M.

By Walter Haight.
A Staff Correspondent

Havre de Grace, Md., Sept. 17. Here by the Susquehanna River Maryland's major fall racing season opens tomorrow, with the first program of the Hartford Agricultural and Breeders Association's 11-day meeting. The usual seven-race program is offered, featured by the annual running of the $2,500 Susquehanna Handicap, a three-quarter-mile sprint.

With every purse $1,000 or more, "The Graw," as this track is popularly called, has drawn an excellent assortment of horses. Smacking only lightly of the best of the half-mile and Charles Town racers, the opening card is the average of the New England and New York programs which cut in here last year.

The Susquehanna Handicap not only shapes up as a good race, but it has drawn a star field. Roman Soldier, second in the Kentucky Derby and frequent stake winner, is the most prominent of the lot and carries the top weight of 122 pounds. Silent Shot, Sobriety, Aneroid and Top Dog get in with light assignments. Whereaway, Western star, must tote 120 pounds if he is sent postward.

In addition to the feature, three other six-furlong sprints are programmed with the balance of the card given over to the distance horses. A maiden event and a claiming race are placed in the first and third positions on the card which will be used for the daily double. Limit fields are available in both races. In fact, entries were heavy in each of the day's events.

The wave of financial success that swept Charles Town and half-mile courses during the summer has given the major courses hopes for the best meetings since the boom days. Record crowds attended the small courses throughout Maryland and Havre de Grace is ready to greet a 15,000 customers tomorrow.

The first of the three $10,000 stakes scheduled here The Eastern Shore Handicap is due Saturday. A six-furlong test for two-year-olds, the Eastern Shore nominations included practically every juvenile of importance in the East. Local officials are hoping to have Granville and Discovery renew their feud in the Havre de Grace Handicap on closing day.

This track will have all finishes photographed by an electrical camera, which saw service at Saratoga during the summer. The outfit will be operated from a house on top of the steward's pagoda. The Bahr starting gate, as usual, will be used. Jim Milton again will handle the starting.

The running surface is in excellent shape at this writing. Barring rain before post time, the racing will be conducted over a lightning-fast course. Many of the upward of 1,000 horses, now on the grounds, have been working out of the oval in the last few days.

Considering the large number of tracks operating throughout the country, Maryland has drawn its share of the good riders. L. Balaski, J. Renick, S. Renick, J. O'Malley, J. Westrope, H. Dabson, Eddie Smith and Sammy Palumbo are some of the boys slated to ride tomorrow. Saturday's stake will see the appearance of many others. Havre de Grace is again offering a $500 prize to the leading rider of the meeting.

The usual special trains and buses will operate from Washington direct to the track. Post time for the first race is 2:15 p. m., 15 minutes earlier than recent fall sessions.

Arch McDonald to Broadcast Six Catholic U. Football Games

Play-by-Play Account Is Planned

Bill Coyle Will Handle Amplifying System at Local Games.

Bent on making the most of its 1936 football possibilities, at this writing brighter than at any time since Jack Daly and a few cronies organized the first team back in 1910, Catholic University athletic authorities yesterday raided local broadcasting studios and came away with two highly-prized captives, rotund Arch McDonald and dapper Bill Coyle, Washington's premier sports announcers.

McDonald, whose vivid accounts of the Nats' baseball games away from home are tremendously popular with sports fans, will describe all but two of the Cardinals' games over Station WJSV. The lone exceptions are the curtain-raiser with Shenandoah, which occurs during World Series week, when broadcasts are as taboo as communism at the Vatican, and the October 30 fray with Loyola at New Orleans. Even the Mississippi game at Oxford will be aired, McDonald receiving a play-by-play account of the proceedings which he will announce as he does the ball games.

Coyle Handles Loud Speaker.

Coyle, whose nightly sports resumes are rated one of Station WMAL's features, will handle the amplifying system at Brookland, describing the plays and giving various sidelights and enlightening data to the spectators. Regarded as one of the National Broadcasting Systems most valuable field men, Coyle's services were eagerly sought for the season by a number of schools. He will be assisted by "Shag" Shaughnessy, former Cardinal star, and their combined efforts should make grid games much more interesting for Catholic University fans.

Coach "Dutch" Bergman sent the big Red eleven through another tough scrimmage yesterday, driving the boys at break-neck speed for an hour and a half before calling them off. "Irish" Carroll, eel-hipped halfback, again stole the spotlight but for the first time was obliged to share a bit of it with "Dixie" Walker, Spec Foley, Fred Rogers (nee Rydzewski), Joe Yanchulis and one or two others whose work was well nigh perfect.

Another session of body contact is booked today and tomorrow probably will be given over to a regulation game between the first and second teams. Freshmen have reported for work and will be under Coach Eddie LaFond's direction.

Coast Guard Aids At Local Regatta

Many important details were settled at an important meeting of The President's Cup Regatta Committee, held at the Willard Hotel last night. L. Gordon Leech, chairman of the race committee, presided over the meeting. John Remon, chairman of the general committee of the regatta group, also was present.

The United States Coast Guard advised those concerned with the regatta that it would have 11 boats on patrol duty over the course during the water festival, to be held off Hains Point, September 26 and 27. A few of these boats will be dedicated to first-aid purposes, under the auspices of the first-aid committee of the regatta and the Red Cross.

The model regatta, to be held on the reflecting pool September 27, came in for much attention when it was pointed out to those present that some 28 entries had been received for the three scheduled races. It was also pointed out that at least 12 of the miniature craft entered were capable of a speed of 40 miles an hour, or better.

Coleman, Colored Star, Pitches Here on Sunday

"Slick" Coleman, ace pitcher for the Mohawk (N. Y.) Giants, will pitch one game of the double-header against the Jacksonville (Fla.) Red Caps Sunday afternoon at the Griffith Stadium. Coleman, a right-handed speedball artist, is popular with local colored baseball fans.

Mixed Doubles Tennis Crown at Stake Today

The mixed doubles tennis championship of the Department of Playgrounds will be decided this morning on the Chevy Chase playground courts. At 10 a. m., Charlotte Decker and Howard Baer, of Chevy Chase, will encounter Eileen Lennox and Paul Falconer, of Montrose, in the final round of the tournament, in which some 2,500 boys and girls were originally entered.

Playground's Net Entries Are Due

Lists Close Tonight for Men's Open; District's Stars Will Play.

Entries for Washington's outstanding tennis tournament of recent years, the 1936 Department of Playgrounds men's open will close at 6 p. m. today at the Playground office in the District Building.

Promptly at 8 p. m., the tournament committee consisting of Richard Tennyson, assistant supervisor of playgrounds; William O. Shreve, Felix Silva, Jack Gray, Tony Latona and Bob Considine, will make the draw. All the city's leading players are entered including Gilbert Hunt and Barney Welsh.

With this combination favored to gain the finals, the tournament assumes all the proportions of being the foremost event the sport has sponsored in the Capital. The entry of Harold McGuffin, one of the East's ranking players, has been tentatively made to the committee along with those of Frank Goeltz of Wilkesbarre, Pa., who is definitely entered, and Hunter Lott, of Philadelphia.

In addition, Dooley Mitchell, Bud Markey, Hugh Lynch, Ralph McElvenny, Latona, Ed Mather and other stars are entered. Bob Considine, former District champion and Herald columnist, will enter the doubles with his brother, George Considine, Herald tennis writer.

Entries may be made today by telephone to the District playground office, 313 District building, National 6000, branch 192, or at the Tennis Shop, 1019 Fifteenth street northwest, National 5165. Play will start Saturday afternoon at 2 p. m. on the Potomac Park courts.

Jumping Race Draws Fast Field of 20

By the Associated Press.

Fair Hill, Md., Sept. 17.—Some of the country's outstanding timber-toppers will compete here Saturday in the Foxcatcher National Cup Steeplechase.

Indications are there will be at least 20 starters in the cross-country classic to be run over the estate of William du Pont, jr.

Among the horses entered in the 3-mile test are Thomas Hitchcock's Axework; Frank M. Gould's What Have You and Postman Home; Mrs. F. Ambrose Clark's Poindexter, and B. Leslie Behr's Baffler.

The event annually draws a crowd of society sportsmen from Maryland, Virginia, Pennsylvania and Delaware.

If there are more than 20 starters, the purse will be raised from $3,250 to $6,500. Each horse that finishes the race will get $100. The top prizes will depend on the amount of the purse.

There are 19 brush jumps over the course. The average jump is 6 feet high. One jump on the course is 16 feet wide and is packed tightly with cedar brush.

In addition to the foxcatcher classic, there will be several secondary races, which have drawn select entry lists.

G. U. Coach Depends On His "Pony" Backs

Size apparently will not count when Jack Hagerty gets around to the important business of selecting a starting Georgetown backfield for the opening game of the season two weeks hence, with Delaware here, for the cagey Hoya mentor has indicated that three of his "pony" backs will be on the field when the initial kick-off goes soaring over the greensward.

Joe Keegin, Hank Gibbons, Tony Barabas, Joe Frank, to name a few, all good, big, rugged boys who were counted on as regulars when the practice grind started, evidently are giving way to the speed and deception of the smaller fellows who are raising cain in practice at the Hilltop. As matters now stand only one man of considerable tonnage will be in the starting line-up October 3. He is Bill Valiquette, 185-pound halfback.

Tommy Keating, quarterback; Bob Ferrara, halfback, and Bill Duff, fullback, have the edge on other candidates for their several positions, and it will take a lot of football to oust them before the curtain goes up. The closest man to Ferrara happens to be another "pony" back by the name of "Peanuts" Sheeran, who has been designated a member of the "special occasion squad," but may find himself relegated to the role of regular.

Duff, if he succeeds, will beat out one of Georgetown's most highly touted and toughest line smashers for the fullback berth, Frank Meglen, younger, but huskier brother of Joe. It isn't that Frank has declined in prestige, far from it, but Duff has improved so rapidly it is going to take a good man to keep him on the bench. He's small, but size is no handicap when he smacks up against the line. It's like a baby tank hitting a haystack, and with the same disastrous results.

Gallagher, Bride Feted; October 5 Date for Everett

While a party of 50 wined and dined Marty Gallagher and his bride at Griffith Farms last night, those who pull the strings on the popular local fighter settled his fistic future by deciding he was to meet Buck Everett, District Heavyweight Champion, in a 15-round title contest at Griffith Stadium, October 5.

The date must be authorized by the District Boxing Commission and Everett's manager, Jimmy Erwin, who wanted his charge to fight Buck a week or two earlier. The Boxing Commission is not expected to refuse authority to hold the fight on October 5, but those close to Erwin believe he will seek to have the bout held earlier, just in case his fighter might then catch Gallagher out of condition.

The decision to fight Everett, October 5 was reached by Tom O'Donnell, local restaurateur, at whose suburban night club the party for Marty was held, who officially manages Marty; Jim McNamara, officially Gallagher's trainer, and Goldie Ahearn, the match-maker, under whose auspices the fight will be held.

Among those present at the party for Gallagher and his bride, the former Rita McBride, of Boston, were Mr. and Mrs. Roy Clements, Mr. and Mrs. Tom Edwards, Miss Louise Buckley, Inspector and Mrs. William Shelby and their daughter, Mary Elizabeth, and many others.

Nallin, Ex-A. L. Arbiter, Submits to Operation

Special Dispatch to The Post

Frederick, Md., Sept. 16.—Richard F. (Dick) Nallin, former American League umpire, underwent an operation on his right arm at the Frederick City Hospital yesterday. The operation was performed by Dr. Robert Thompson, Baltimore specialist.

Nallin, who retired from baseball last spring to return to his 255-acre farm near here, was badly injured in an automobile accident last June when he fell asleep at the wheel and crashed into an embankment. Since the accident he has lost the use of his right arm. Nallin was an American League umpire for 17 years.

Meglen to Appear For College Stars Against N.Y. Giants

The Washington All-College eleven, which meets the New York Giants and Tuffy Leemans under the lights at Griffith Stadium, October 1, added a hard-hitting fullback to its roster last night when Joe Meglen, co-captain and fullback at Georgetown last year, signed to appear in the game.

One of the most rugged players ever rigged out in the Blue and Gray, Meglen won national acclaim by his work against New York University and Manhattan last season. Against these teams his punting was sensational and his ball-carrying superb. New York sports writers unanimously picked him for all-American honors. But Joe, unfortunately, suffered a let down in the last game of the season against Maryland, and it marred his season's work.

His kicking was way off, averaging only 23 yards a try, and his running just as bad, and it was a rather dull finish for a man who had risen to the heights on previous occasions. Meglen took it pretty much to heart, and for that reason is not only willing but anxious to get one more chance before a local audience. He wants to prove his mettle, and this game with the Giants seems to afford a good chance for him.

Virginia Gridmen In Rough Workout

University, Va., Sept. 17 (AP).—Tanned and rugged after a two-week training period at the Norfolk naval base, the University of Virginia football candidates were sent through a rough session on pass plays and punting today.

Scarcity of Squirrels In Md., Hunters Find

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Hagerstown, Md., Sept. 17.—Bearing out predictions of game wardens, squirrels have been found by hunters to be scarcer this fall than ever before in the history of Western Maryland. The hunting season opened here Tuesday, with the largest bag being reported by Dr. R. M. Hill, of Hagerstown, who shot 3. Most of the several hundred other hunters returned empty handed.

Game wardens reported that most of the squirrels either froze to death or starved due to the heavy snow that covered the countryside to a depth of from 4 to 7 feet for two months during the winter.

Masonic Bowlers Open.

A 32-team Masonic Bowling League will open its season tonight on the Convention Hall alleys. Promptly at 8 p. m., President Dave Burrows will roll out the first ball and the scramble for the 1936-37 title will be under way. The number of teams entered this year exceeds by two the number competing last season. The value of the prize money has also been more than doubled.

Northwesterns Drill.

The Northwestern A. C., a 150-pound team, will drill Sunday. All players are requested to report at Sixteenth and U streets at 11 o'clock.

Out Fishin'

by Jack Hawley

For several weeks the bluefish situation has been a hypodermic injection to anglers: good days and bad, mostly bad. All this occurred after an unusually early bluefishing season, wherein the largest blues (up to 13 pounds) were being caught in goodly numbers, up to as high as 40 to the boat.

On our many trips bluefishing we interviewed hundreds of the old-timers, seeking definite information as to why the blues had suddenly stopped biting, with the assurance that the fish were still with us.

We believed the bait question responsible—too much live bait in the Chesapeake and its tidal waters. This theory was scoffed at by many boatmen and anglers, who were thoroughly sold on their convictions that the fish were scarce and the few schools available had been wiped out by anglers and commercial netters, with the latter doing the most of the wiping out.

Recently a local fishing editor agreed that we had hit on the correct solution and reported more bluefish actually seen in the lower bay than ever before, but the same conditions prevailed in that vicinity. Fish refused to strike.

Dr. Byers, of Cincinnati, fishing with Dr. Paul Hatch two weeks ago, enjoyed a very small sample of our big bluefishing on Southwest Middles. Desiring to continue another week of this sport he journeyed up the Atlantic Coast as far as Rhode Island.

Here is the doctor's report:

"Millions of bluefish with practically the same condition prevailing as in your waters. Live bait very plentiful."

Here is another report from Solomons Island (Capt. Harry Woodburn):

"Large schools of good-size blues breaking off Cove and Cedar Points, Hoopers Island, Point No Point, and they are actually biting good and going for their lure in the same manner we know them capable of, smashing and tearing out lines."

Several fine catches have been made in these waters within the past two days. We'll investigate by going down immediately and giving you all the particulars fresh from the sea in "Out Fishin'" tomorrow. We will withhold other reports that are most encouraging and if authentic pass them on to you in time for your week-end fishing trip.

Pepco Downs Naval Air's Nine, 3-2

Smith Wins Mound Duel; Investigation Battles Millers Today.

Potomac & Electric Power Co. stock took a sharp rise in the sandlot market of The Post Association city week-day playoffs yesterday. The Pepcos polished off Naval Air Station, 3 to 2, for their second series win in as many starts.

While some 1,500 fans watched Walter Smith, former Central High right-hander, set back the champs of the Army and Navy League with six hits on the South Ellipse, Procurement Division of the Federal AA League was advancing by forfeit as the Mount Vernon Club of the Washington Church League failed to show up on the North Ellipse.

The church champions could only muster eight players. They lost to Naval Air, 12 to 1, in their first game and thus are eliminated from the series, joining National Savings & Trust Co., Bankers League champions. The Bankers passed out Tuesday, going down fighting before the Resettlement Greenbelts, winners of the Federal A League, 5 to 3. National Savings lost its first game, 3 to 2, to Accounts and Deposits of the Sports Center Government League.

Millers vs. Investigation.

Today's attraction between Bureau of Investigation and Miller Furniture promises to be one of the standouts of the series. The game will start at 4 p. m. on the South Ellipse, being the first test for both clubs. Investigation won the United States Government League title with 20 wins in 21 starts. Miller Furniture took the Industrial League crown, defeating the Heurich Brewers in a hard-fought play-off series.

Steve Chaconas, hard-hitting Pepco second baseman, shared the honors yesterday with young Smith. He scored the first of the Pepco runs and knocked in the winning run in the last half of the ninth.

New Randolph-Macon Grid Coach Resigns

Richmond, Va., Sept. 17 (AP).—Stanley Pincura, whose selection as assistant football coach at Randolph-Macon was announced last night, informed college authorities today he had decided to return to Ohio State and complete work for his degree.

He announced his decision in a telegram.

It will probably be several days before another coach is lined up, since Head Coach Frank Summers had already departed for Emory and Henry when Pincura's message arrived.

Purdue Hopes Dimmed by 2d Death

McGannon, Ace Backfield Man, Dies of Burns in Gym Explosion.

By the Associated Press.

Lafayette, Ind., Sept. 17.—Tommy McGannon, of Evansville, Ind., whose touchdown runs brought Purdue two Big-Ten victories last year, today became the second Boilermaker football star to lose his life as the result of burns suffered in an explosion and fire last Saturday.

Carl E. Dahlbeck, of Lyndonville, Vt., died Sunday from burns received in the fire.

The death of McGannon resulted in the postponement of football practice for the second time this week and dealt the Boilermaker gridiron hopes a severe blow. Dahlback was a regular guard on the squad while McGannon played halfback. Last year he broke loose for touchdown runs to win the games against Northwestern and Iowa.

It was learned today that university officials, after a long conference, decided against cancellation of the football schedule for the year.

Three of the other four players burned in the fire still were in the hospital today and the condition of Lowell Decker, of Reading, Mich., was described as serious, but not critical.

Navy Will Play Plebe Eleven Saturday

Annapolis, Md., Sept. 17 (AP).—The Naval Academy varsity football squad will get a hard test Saturday when it will be pitted against the Plebe and "B" squads in a practice game.

Lieut. Thomas J. Hamilton, head coach, has been working with the varsity group since September 4, drilling in fundamentals and attempting to find the strongest combination. The game, which begins at 2:30 p. m., will give him an opportunity to size up his players under playing conditions.

Thomas E. Edwards, Corpus Christi, Tex., running back, who came to the front fast in practice, was lost to the squad today through injuries. Hamilton said he expected he would be out for the season. Irwin F. Fike, Normal, Ill., veteran end, went on the invalid list several weeks ago.

Hamilton said the squad has been handicapped by a number of minor injuries which have and are causing players to lose valuable time from practice.

The Navy coaching staff is disappointed with the showing of the squad in practice. Hamilton said there would probably be some "startling" changes in line-ups brought about before the opening game with William and Mary on September 26.

Raymond F. DuBois, Naugatuck, Conn., and Richard D. Gunderson, Portage, Wis., guards, have been showing well in practice. Kenneth B. Hyson and Karl Van Meter, of Los Angeles, Calif., who came up from last year's plebe squad, are pleasing the coaches by their showing at tackle. Hamilton said they were coming fast for sophomores.

Cox Is Tossed To Defeat by Managoff

Kansas Star Twists Foot When Thrown Out of Ring; Bout Rough.

By Bob Mathias.

The forces of evil waged a losing fight last night at Turner's rassle shop when Kansas City Joe Cox was unable to return to the ring after being bounced into the ringside seats by Ivan Managoff after 46 torrid minutes of tussling. The Sunflower Villain, after punishing his curly-haired opponent with arm and hammer locks during most of the contest, succumbed to a dose of his own medicine, a butt which had behind it the impetus of the springing ropes. Falling into a chair, Joe twisted his foot and had to be carried to the dressing room.

In the semifinal, Little Beaver, North Carolina sachem, lost to Hans Kampher after some 15 minutes of groveling. The Indian, another of Dracula's understudies, tried repeatedly to subdue his antagonist with favorite legal holds only to have Der Deutscher break them with ease. Discouraged with fair tactics the Chief tried dirty work, only to be fondly rubbed in return. Angered, the German applied a bear hug, cracking the Cherokee's breast-bone, and rendering him unconscious for some 10 minutes after the bout.

Piers, McDougal Draw.

In the three 30-minute preliminaries, conducted under the shadow of Cyclone Burns' stomach, Henry Piers and Scotty McDougal agonized volubly to a draw; Nick Campofreda pinned Jim Wallis in 13 minutes, and Cliff Olson drew with John Katan.

MacDougal worked on Piers' left hand unmercifully to cause no end of discomfited face rubbing on the part of Hank, but a well applied scissors kept him even, in what was the cleanest and dullest bout of the night. Jim Wallis followed the way of the transgressor, trying every illegality in the game, only to meet his doom after a series of shoulder blocks, elbow clips, and a body press, applied by Nick Campofreda.

Finished Goods Figure in Half Of U. S. Exports

Crude Materials Also Factor in Shipments Abroad.

By the Associated Press.

The Commerce Department reported yesterday exports of finished manufactures accounted for about half of this country's foreign trade shipments during the first seven months of 1936.

These exports were listed at $670,890,000 of the previously reported $1,311,039,000 export total for the seven months. Europe, the largest purchaser of all exports, also led in the buying of finished manufactures, with purchases of $202,167,000.

The largest factor in a $1,348,533,000 total of imports was crude materials at $402,564,000. Asia was the most important source in this category, with exports to the United States totaling $194,837,000.

Europe supplied $124,269,000 of the $249,255,000 of finished manufactures imported.

Foreign Exchange.

By the Associated Press.

Fresh political flights in the streets of Paris yesterday precipitated new demand for the pound sterling in currency markets and that unit rose to a new high in terms of the dollar since August 19, 1934.

In New York the pound was up ⅜ of a cent to $5.06¼, compared with an earlier London closing for the dollar at 5.06⅝ to the pound.

With the aid of official support, however, the New York quotation for the French franc was unchanged at 6.58¾ cents. Earlier the dollar had closed in Paris at the equivalent of 6.583 cents to the franc.

Boston Wool Market.

Boston, Sept. 17 (AP).—(U. S. Dept. of Agri.)—The demand was rather spotty in the Boston wool market today with some houses getting a fair call while others received very little. Most grades of Ohio fleeces had some call.

Fine delaine Ohio fleeces brought 35@36 cents in the grease, while fine delaine Michigan fleece wool was offered at around 34 cents. Staple length ½ blood Ohio wools had a number of calls and were readily salable at 36@36½ cents, but the amount offered was rather limited.

Bank Clearings Show Decided Upturn in Week

Reach Highest Point in 19-Week Period; Dollar Leads Field.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Sept. 17.—An upturn occurred in bank clearings for the latest week which carried the total to the highest point in 19 weeks.

The total, as reported to Dun & Bradstreet, Inc., for 22 leading cities in the United States for the week ended Wednesday, September 16, was $6,456,984,000 against $5,846,383,000 for the corresponding period in 1935, a gain of 10.4 per cent. This contrasted with a loss of 10.0 per cent for the previous week.

At New York City, the aggregate, the highest in 13 weeks, reached $4,216,458,000, an increase of 8.7 per cent over the $3,880,540,000 recorded for the comparative week of 1935. For outside centers, the amount reported was $2,240,526,000, a gain of 14.0 per cent over the similar period a year ago.

Total clearings advanced $2,237,741,000 over the previous five-day period. Between the two comparative weeks in 1935, there was also an increase, one of $1,159,620,000.

Farmers' Income Increased in July

New York, Sept. 17.—The farmers' total cash income amounted to $735,000,000 in July as against $470,000,000 a year ago. Total income, for the first seven months, was $4,024,000,000 this year as against $3,427,000,000 last year, an increase of 17.4 per cent. Despite a rise from June to July in the prices of goods bought by the farmers, these prices were lower than a year ago.

As a result, the farmers' purchasing power showed a greater increase over a year ago than their income. The farmers' purchasing power in July was 80.3 per cent higher than a year ago and, for the first seven months, 22.3 per cent higher. In July, according to the Alexander Hamilton Institute the farmers were, for the time being, fully out of the depression since their purchasing power was 4.7 per cent above the pre-depression level in 1929.

Stocks Harden in Reduced Volume; U. S. Bonds Weak; France Loses Gold.

New York, Sept. 17.—Absence of sellers helped the stock market to recover its poise and the majority of stocks hardened a fraction to a point. Trading volume was slack, and little attempt was made by the bulls to follow up the advantage which their strategic position of the day gave them. Little more than half a million shares had changed hands up to the last hour, and the final trading brought no increase in activity. Commodities were a little better. December wheat closed ⅞ of a cent higher at 115 cents a bushel.

Trade news affecting markets was of no great consequence, and the amount of professional activity was slight, because of the Jewish holiday. The bulk of investment funds showed little sign of being disturbed, nor was there much inducement to bring fresh money into the market on the long term side. The position will not necessarily change much over the next several days, but a moderate increase in stock shifting probably will soon take place.

Dreariness Abroad.

Looking abroad the outlook was about as gloomy as ever. Fighting in Spain is not letting up, either in ferocity or in advantage gained by either side, and as time goes on the possibility of an outcome favorable to Spain or the rest of the world recedes. All that promises to precipitate action by France, Germany, Switzerland, Holland and Italy on currency and exchange problems.

Securities markets may be disturbed temporarily, no matter what is done, and the trouble may last a long time if premature abandonment of gold by France, for example, is had; but if an all-round understanding on currency stabilization takes place, without a rush for currency depreciation, the benefits on world trade ought speedily to appear.

Meanwhile the anxiety concerning the franc continues to hold the quotation at the gold export level. The fact that no great amount of metal is leaving France is proof of official intervention with the free movement of gold rather than of reassurance on the part of the exchange market or of those with capital in France. This week's statement of the Bank of France shows a comparatively small drop in gold holdings and a contraction in some other important items, including circulation. Bank of England also reported a small fall in gold and circulation.

Government Finance.

Echoes of the now famous controversy over the soundness of Government bonds, and consequently the solvency of the banks and insurance companies, continued to be heard. Fortunately much of the misunderstanding has been rubbed off, and everyone presumably understands what the critics of the Administration's inflationary fiscal policy really meant—that is, that the course leads toward destruction of values. So long as most people think, as apparently they now do, that it is not too late to change the course, the damage is not irreparable, our paper money will be accepted for nearly as much as it would if it were backed by gold, and Government promises to pay will be taken at face value, just as though the interest and maturities could be met easily without crushing taxation or dangerous inflation of credit through semi-forced bank loans.

Airplanes Rise.

Stocks were rather good in a few groups, were not discouragingly poor in any section, and were dull in other places. Steel shares had a good start, with the favorable mid-week facts and prophecies and the buying of airplane stocks continued. In speculative quarters the feeling is growing that perhaps some other groups, possibly the oils included, may look more attractive for a while than the hard-worked steels. Along with a better market for oils and utilities the motor shares drew more attention. Both Chrysler and General Motors moved up modestly.

Religious Influence.

A quite noticeable thinning out of customers in the rooms of Wall street commission houses was observed today. It was ascribed to the fact that many Jews were absent from the financial district to celebrate Rosh Hashanah. In that connection there is an old saying in Wall street, "Sell stocks before Rosh Hashanah and buy them back after Yom Kippur." Yom Kippur, Jewish Day of Atonement, falls on September 26.

French Gold.

Quite a good deal more French gold was engaged today. As on previous occasions the initiative was entirely in Paris, the banks here being merely the receiving agents, sometimes sharing in the profit and sometimes merely receiving a handling fee. A few of the large local banks, it is said, are refusing to engage in gold shipping transactions, giving the excuse that they do not wish to make the French position more difficult than it is, which probably means that they are afraid to take the risk for a small profit or have had hints from their Paris branches.

Segregation.

Probably most people who have studied the matter will agree with Gayer Dominick, a New York Stock Exchange member, that the prevailing practice of a brokerage firm being sponsor for one or more investment trusts, and taking commissions for the business transacted by the trust, is a perfectly safe arrangement, so long as the brroker is honest. The same applies to the relationship between the banker and the trustee. The highest class of brokers may not insist on a rapid turnover of investment portfolio by their controlled investment trusts just to obtain more commissions, nor will they dump into the trust's account the stocks which have looked good but have turned sour on the hands of the brokers as individual speculators. The tough part of the problem is that those things have been done, and may be done again. It's a problem that will require careful consideration by the SEC. It will be fortunate for the markets if the solution reached will prevent duplication of the 1928-1929 malpractice.

Mortgage Unit In Alexandria To Mail Checks

Final Payments on Common Being Made; Preferred Issue Settled.

By Thomas M. Cahill.

Checks in final payment of 100 percent liquidation of the Alexandria Mortgage Corporation, Alexandria, Va., will be mailed to holders of common stock September 28, according to Charles T. Nicholson, vice president and executive officer of the corporation. The payment was authorized at a meeting of the board of directors Tuesday.

The preferred stock of the corporation was liquidated some time ago, according to Nicholson, the liquidation payments also being on the basis of 100 per cent of the par value. As there are still some remaining assets, a further common stock dividend is anticipated.

The corporation was chartered in 1925 to do a second mortgage business. It has been liquidating since 1934. During its active existence, it loaned several million dollars on real estate in Alexandria City and Arlington and Fairfax Counties. The original capital was $200,000, all common stock. Later, $126,000 of preferred was issued.

Officers of the liquidating institution are Clyde C. Lamond, president; Charles T. Nicholson, vice president and executive officer; Wallace N. Lindsey, vice president and treasurer, and J. Randall Caton, jr., secretary and counsel. Other directors include William P. Ames, John G. Graham, Eugene L. Lindsey, Dr. S. B. Moore, Carroll Pierce, Dr. Claude S. Semones, A. H. Thomas, Alfred Thomson and B. Weil.

Active in Bank.

Nicholson, active head of the corporation throughout its existence, is now vice president and executive officer of the First Federal Savings & Loan Association of Alexandria, which was organized some months ago and declared its first dividend June 30. The new association was chartered by the Federal Government to deal in first mortgages exclusively.

Committee Announced.

E. Wallace Schreiner, chairman of the public speaking committee of Washington Chapter, American Institute of Banking, announces the following members to serve on his committee for the coming year: C. # Gains Reported For 1936 Sales Of Machinery

Unfilled Orders Indicate Better Than Average Trade Next Year.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

New York, Sept. 17.—Orders and shipments of industrial machinery during the eight months ended August 31, ran far ahead of totals for the corresponding 1935 period. Large unfilled orders and a high rate of incoming business assure fully satisfactory operations during the rest of 1936, as well as indicating better than average sales increases for early 1937, according to the Standard Statistics Co., of New York.

The present trend toward increasing use of modern machine tools is being fostered by the need to replace obsolete industrial equipment, demand for greater accuracy, desirability of replacing slow, cumbersome machines with new, faster models which require less plant area and fewer attendants, and changes in products, necessitating machine tools of advanced design.

During 1934-1935, the automotive industry was the largest purchaser of new tools, but reviving industrial activity in the current year has greatly stimulated sales to the fabricated metal product manufacturers, and has fostered additional buying from the automotive trade, and farm equipment manufacturers.

Voigt Upsets Campbell in Amateur

the New York veteran had already served notice of his return to form and did a businesslike job of reaching the semifinals for the first time in eight years.

Voigt's mishap, caused when he pulled off a loose string from one of his clubs, created the most excitement of the afternoon's sixth or quarter-final round. Someone summoned an ambulance on the theory that no chances should be taken with a potential semi-finalist, but Voigt refused to take any first aid. He was three up, at the twelfth, when the medical staff rushed to the rescue, and continued his machine-like golf, following the volunteer interruption, to end the match on the fifteenth green.

Upon Voigt's slim shoulders rests the responsibility of meeting Britain's foremost challenge for the American amateur crown since Thomas Philip Perkins had the dubious distinction of being trounced, 10 and 9, by Robert Tyre Jones, jr., in the finals of the 1928 tournament at Brae Burn, Mass. Perkins downed Voigt in the semi-finals that year and George will try to obtain vicarious revenge at McLean's expense tomorrow.

McLean's threat, in the opinion of railbirds, is not to be taken lightly, despite the general notion that the successor to Lawson Little as champion will emerge from the winner of the Goodman-Fischer match. Certainly the "dope" favors the younger Americans, who have shot the most consistently effective golf of the tournament, but McLean satisfied today's galleries that he has rare fighting qualities as well as the essential shots for the "clutches."

Heath Takes Beating.

The young Scotch whisky salesman didn't have much trouble disposing of the former Harvard captain, Mel Heath, jr., of Boston, 6 and 4, in the fifth round but he needed a sub-par brand of golf to eliminate the home club star, John F. Riddell, jr., 3 and 1, this afternoon.

Riddell, after a sensational 20-hole triumph in the morning over the aristocratic Tommy Tailer, in par-equaling golf for the entire route, was in a challenging mood. Consequently it took all of McLean's resources, under severe pressure, to retain a thin lead against the challenges of his veteran opponent.

The Scot was 2 under par, for the 17 holes played, and that, as it turned out, was the best performance of the quarter-finals.

Goodman remains the tournament's betting choice but he didn't play as sound golf from tee to green as Fischer during today's concluding "double-header" session of 18-hole matches. The sturdy Nebraskan was extended for the first time by the fighting Poughkeepsie (N. Y.) entry, Ray Billows, after routing the 18-year-old Englishman, John Langley, by 5 and 3, in the fifth round.

Billows Makes Birdies.

Billows, who plays no favorites and possesses a tenacious match-playing temperament, carried Goodman to the turn all even with the aid of birdies on the fifth and eighth holes. He squared the match again at the fourteenth, but finally yielded, 2 and 1, after becoming tangled with the bunkers on the closing holes.

Goodman's marvelous short game, featuring accurate chip shots and extraordinary steadiness in holing medium-length putts, came to his rescue. The Nebraskan saved himself at least five times with close range shots in the pinches. Billows had the courage, but he didn't quite have the shots to match Goodman when the match reached its critical stages.

Fischer had the easiest quarter-final session, taking Russell Martin, of Chicago, into camp, 6 and 4, with a par-equaling stretch of golf. This was a sharp contrast, however, to the fifth round struggle that Johnny had in eliminating Gus Moreland, of Peoria, Ill., the former Texas Walker Cup star, one up, in as thrilling a bout as the tournament has witnessed.

Physical Exams For High Gridmen

Carrying out the policy announced in The Post several months ago, school authorities have sent out certificates to parents of more than 500 boys expecting to be high school football candidates this fall, all of whom must have written consent to play.

Birch E. Bayh, director of health and physical education in the public school system, also has announced the dates for first compulsory physical examinations to be given high school athletes. Central's football men will be examined Tuesday; Eastern's, Wednesday; Tech's, Thursday, and Roosevelt's, Friday.

Western gridmen will undergo examination September 28, and Woodrow Wilson's, September 29. The schedule for the colored high schools follows: Dunbar, Monday; Armstrong, Tuesday; and Cardozo, Wednesday.

Bayh explained that the examination will require detailed reports on heart, lungs, blood pressure, tonsils, nasal passages, eyes, teeth and feet. A tuberculin test also will be required.

Students may be examined by their family physician, Bayh pointed out, but those unable to afford outside examination may take advantage of the services of doctors appointed by the School Board.

Parents' certificates must not only contain permission for the boy to play, but acknowledgment that school authorities will not be held responsible for such accidents as might occur in play.

Goodman Picked To Take Amateur

Amateur before this week was to reach the quarter-finals, although for years the 24-year-old string bean from Cincinnati, has been one of the world's best amateurs, winning the National Amateur medal twice when qualifying rounds were held. He's the longest hitter off the tees among the survivors. Uses the wide open stance. He hits his wood shots slightly off the left foot, as the better pros do, but reverses his position on his long irons, moving gradually to his right foot for shorter irons. Didn't start playing golf this year until July and profited by his rest.

George Voigt . . . George, a sad-looking boy, is right around his dangerous forties. He's been banging at the door for years. Disgusted with the new-fangled clubs, George went back to his old "bats" this year and has been hotter than hot. His clubs look like they came over in the Ark, black and rusty. Learned his game on the East Potomac public links at Washington, D. C., and his prize shot still is the old "public links special," a chip and run to the pin. George isn't long off the tees but he's straighter than a tight-laced preacher off the tees and with his rusty irons. He's one of the most popular golfers in the New York district.

Latona Gains U. S. Tennis Finals

Tony Latona gained the finals of the United States Government men's tennis championships for the third straight year yesterday and rests one step away from his third straight title. The champ experienced some difficulty before getting past Ed Mather, tall Texan, by scores of 10—8, 6—2, on the Potomac Park courts.

Latona, however, was in easy circumstances in comparison with Ralph McElvenny, the Security and Exchange Commission lawyer, who found himself one set all with Morgan (Happy) Jacob in a quarter-final match. McElvenny, seeded No. 2, lost the first set Wednesday, 6—1, and Jacob, seeded No. 8, lost the second, 6—2.

At this juncture play was resumed and McElvenny proceeded to gain the semifinals, at 6—2. He will face Spencer (Giant-killer) Howell today at 4 p. m. Howell's chief claim for prestige is a startling sweep to the semifinals despite his unseeded rating. The former George Washington player eliminated Hugh Trigg, former Public Parks champion; Arthur Simmons, No. 7 seeded player, and George Botts, jr., among others.

Mather and Latona virtually re-enacted the final of last year's tournament when Latona won another hard-fought match. Yesterday he took a 5--to-2 lead over the 6-foot 3-inch AAA lawyer, but the latter chipped it away and came close to taking the set.

Mary Ryan, of the Department of Interior, gained the finals of the women's tournament, in which she is defending her championship, with a 6—2, 6—2 win over Johanna Zetlmeier, of PWA.

Latona, who is defending his doubles title, paired with Mather in a semifinal match against Stan Haney and Jacob, Internal Revenue clerk, and they could do no better than break even at 6—3, 4—6 when darkness halted play.

Hecht and Guy-Curran Win in Bowling League

Hecht Co. and Guy-Curran swept through their first matches last night to jump into a first place tie in the Department Store Bowling League. Hechts took all three games from Palais Royal and Guy-Curran did likewise to the Credit Bureau.

In other first night matches, Woodward & Lothrop defeated the defending championship team, S. Kanns & Sons, 2-1; Lansburghs took the odd game from the Raleigh Haberdashery and Jelleff's fell by the wayside by the same margin at the hands of William Hahn & Co.

Brewers, Shady Grove To Clash Again Sunday

The Heurich Brewers, winner of the first half in The Post's Association National City Senior League, and the Shady Grove A. C., winners of the second half, will clash on the Elipse Sunday afternoon in the third and deciding game of the city championship series. The beer barons took the first game of the play-off, 9-1, and then dropped the second to Shady Grove, 7-3.

In the junior class, Georges Radio Co. will be playing West End Laundry in the second half championship race. Should the Radios win, they will meet Simpson's Pharmacy for the second half flag; but a victory for the West Enders will give the druggists the last half title. J. C. Flood Plumbers, first half champions, will be the competition that the winner will face for the season crown.

APPLE MARY

By Martha Orr

WHERE'S MARY, DAD?
AW, SHE PUT A FEW "MAGIC APPLES" ON HER APPLE CART, AND WENT OUT TO SELL 'EM. A GOOFY IDEA—
NOT IF IT'S MARY'S—
WELL, SHE ONLY TOOK A DOZEN APPLES. SHE CAN'T MAKE MORE THAN A FEW CENTS ON THAT NUMBER. AND SHE'S BEEN GONE ALL MORNING.
YOU'RE SLOWIN' DOWN, MARY. HALF A DAY TO SELL A DOZEN APPLES. TSK, TSK.
I DIDN'T SELL THEM.
I GAVE THEM AWAY FOR SAMPLES. AND IN RETURN I'VE GOT TEN NICE FAT ORDERS FOR "MAGIC APPLES"! LOOK!
YEAH, DAD, IT SURE WAS A GOOFY IDEA, HEH, HEH.

In this, his sixth article, he appraises the results of the Maine elections.*

By Claude E. Robinson.

The Maine barometer has registered a Republican victory of 43,000 votes. In the race for the United States Senate, where the personality of Louis J. Brann, the Democratic candidate, was a large factor, this margin was cut down to 5,000.

The combination lead of the three Republican candidates for Congress, however, was about 50,000, hence the 43,000 gubernatorial plurality of Lewis O. Barrows can be taken as a fair measure of the G. O. P. victory.

James A. Farley, Democratic national chairman, is inclined to minimize the Republican victory, declaring that "it does not seem like very much to brag on." John D. M. Hamilton, the Republican chairman, on the other hand, is of the firm belief that Maine has "pointed the way" to a Republican triumph in November.

From the non-partisan point of view, there appears to be no foundation for the theory that the party which elects the Governor in Maine will necessarily win the Presidency in November. When Republican Presidents have been elected, this sequence has held true, but this is only because Maine is traditionally a Republican State.

Since 1856 only one of the six Democratic Presidents has been heralded by the election of this party's gubernatorial candidate in Maine. This simple interpretation of the Maine returns, therefore, must be rejected.

Size of Vote Undefendable.

Many observers seek to interpret the barometer returns by the size of the vote. This year the Republican plurality in Maine is about 14 votes per 100 cast. Since 1864, excluding the elections of 1880, 1912 and 1924 because of third party complications, the record shows that a Republican President has been elected in every year when this party's candidate for Governor has carried Maine by a plurality of 20 votes per 100 cast. When the Republican gubernatorial candidate in Maine has received a plurality of less than 20 votes per 100 cast, as in the present case, the Republicans have won the Presidency six out of ten times.

Another theory advanced by the barometer statisticians is that the Democratic pluralities will be cut down in all States by the amount of decrease in Maine. Brann, present Democratic Governor, for example, received 50 per cent of the vote in Maine in 1932. F. Harold Dubord, the defeated Democratic candidate for Governor this year, polled 42 per cent of the total vote cast, a decline of about 16 per cent from Brann's figure four years ago.

According to his theory, Roosevelt's percentage of the total vote in each State in November will be about 16 per cent under his 1932 figure. This would predict virtually an even break between Roosevelt and Landon in the electoral college.

No Close Relationship.

The validity of this interpretation is questionable. In the first place, past election statistics do not show a very close statistical relationship between the Maine gubernatorial vote and the Presidential vote in other States, as this theory assumes. Secondly, the current polls of the American Institute of Public Opinion and Crossley, Maine, shows a wide variation between States in the decline of Democratic strength from 1932.

This interpretation of the Maine barometer assumes that this decline is uniformly the same in every State.

In 1932, the country, normally Republican, swung heavily over to the Democratic Party. During the past four years, Republican sympathies have again been asserted, and the Democrats have lost some of their 1932 vote. In the latest poll of the American Institute of Public Opinion, decline in the Roosevelt sentiment from 1932 is shown in 39 of the 48 States. Monday's election in Maine indicates that this State is participating in the movement of voters back to the Republican Party.

Straw Polls Valuable.

The best gage of this change in other States, however, is furnished by straw polls. These show that although the swing away from the Democrats has returned some States to the Republican column, the President still retains virtually enough electoral votes to win, and holds these votes by comfortable pluralities. Landon, on the other hand, holds most of his electoral votes by narrow margins, which could be erased by any minor change of sentiment.

Aside from their barometric interest, the Maine returns have provided the first test of the season on the accuracy of straw votes. The Republican National Committee conducted a postcard poll of registered voters in Maine which gave Barrows, the Republican candidate for governor, 70 per cent of the total vote cast. Actually, Barrows received but 56 per cent, a predictive error of 14 per cent. White, the Republican candidate for the United States Senate, polled 61 per cent of the straw vote, but only 50.8 per cent of the actual vote.

The vote of the three Republican Congressmen was overestimated by about the same margin as that of the Senator.

The probability of this overestimation was pointed out in these columns last week. The most likely reason for the error is that low income voters, who tend to be Democratic, return a smaller percentage of cards than high income voters, who tend to be Republican. This principle should be kept in mind whenever the returns from a mail poll are being analyzed.

Other polls of Maine have tested sentiment only on the Presidency. The percentage of the total vote reported for Landon in these polls was as follows: Republican National Committee, 67 per cent; Literary Digest, 67 per cent; American Institute of Public Opinion, 63 per cent; Crossley, Me., 61 per cent.

The Republican percentage of the gubernatorial vote on Monday was 56 per cent, somewhat under the Landon figure shown in the straw polls.

It should be pointed out that in practically all elections since 1856 the Republican percentage of the Presidential vote in Maine in November has been greater than this party's gubernatorial vote in September; hence this apparent spread will probably be reduced when the Landon straw figures are compared with the official Novemer vote.

French Vessel Took Wrong Course, Survivor Says; Death Toll Is 39.

By the Associated Press.

Reykjavik, Iceland, Sept. 17.—A mistake in navigation on the part of the experienced officers in command was blamed tonight for the foundering of the French exploration ship Pourquoi Pas in which 39 lives were lost including that of Capt. Jean Charcot.

The vessel went on the rocks and sank yesterday with all hands save one, Eugene Gouidec, a quartermaster who tonight told of the events leading up to the disaster.

Partly recovered from exhaustion resulting from four hours in the wild sea before he was cast up on shore, Gouidec said the vessel had got off her course.

Officers, he said, were frantically trying to get bearings when the ship piled onto the jagged rocks of Iceland's bleak coast.

Took Wrong Course.

He was on the dog watch, Gouidec said, when he was sent below to get charts. An officer, he said, told him navigators had taken the wrong course mistaking the Akranes Lighthouse for Selt-Jarnarnes.

Gouidec said he was below when the 449-ton ship struck.

He said the bow was cleanly broken off and the foremast snapped off to the deck.

Cap. Le Connait, he said, ordered all to try and save themselves. One by one the men leaped into the raging waters and all except Gouidec either drowned or were dashed to death on the rocks.

The lone survivor said Capt. Le Connait made a heroic effort to save the ship by hoisting sails after water had put the engines out of commission.

The craft only bounced around helplessly, crashing into a rock known as "Hnokki," which has been the doom of several ships in the past.

Charcot Still on Bridge.

Gouidec said that when he jumped he saw Charcot still standing on the bridge with Capt. Le Connait.

He and another sailor climbed on a floating gangway, but the waves soon washed his comrade to his death.

Gouidec lost consciousness for about four hours and remembered only that he woke up in a farm house to which he had been carried from the beach where he was cast up.

The 22 bodies, including that of Capt. Charcot, already recovered, will be brought to Reykjavik tomorrow.
